Cornell Isolates Immunity Agent In Pure Crystal

The Jack Bean Yields Hemagglutinin as a Protein Form.

Termed Long Step In War on Disease

Artificial Production of Germs' Enemy Is Believed Possible.

By the Associated Press.

Ithaca, N. Y., March 31.—Isolation for the first time in pure crystalline form of one of the so-called "immune bodies," the little-understood substances which promote immunity to disease, was announced tonight at Cornell University.

The discovery is of intense scientific interest because it may lead to advances in the study of the phenomenon of immunity, the process underlying body resistance.

The newly isolated substance is a hemagglutinin (something which causes red blood cells to stick together) extracted from the jack bean. These are large, white beans from a common fodder crop. The hemagglutinin was found by Prof. James B. Sumner and Stacey F. Howell, Ph. D., of the Medical College of Cornell at Ithaca.

A Crystalline Protein.

The substance is a crystalline protein. It forms double wedge-shaped, colorless crystals. It acts in some unknown way on red blood corpuscles to cause their sticking.

The pure material, even when diluted 10,000,000 times, causes perceptible agglutinatoin of dog and cat red blood cells. It has much less effect on man, where dilution is only 100 to 1,000 times. Cow and sheep blood react to it like man's.

Agglutination is one of the tests for blood transfusions. When blood of two persons is not of the same type, one causes agglutination in the other and can not be used for transfusion.

This agglutination of cells is one of the defense mechanisms of immunity. It is a process the body employs to fight certain germs. Immunity to typhoid is an illustration.

Other Immune Bodies.

The mysterious agglutinin produced by injection of the typhoid vaccine causes the typhoid germs to stick together. The belief is that when the typhoid germs are thus bunched it is easier for the white blood cells to destroy them.

Many different kinds of bacteria give rise to agglutinins. Each produces its own agglutinin and each one is specific. In other words the agglutinin obtained from one disease-producing bacterium is not a protection against some other kind of germ.

Agglutinins are only one of the "immune bodies." Another type is antitoxin, such as diphtheria, tetanus and botulinus antitoxin. A third is the lysins. These have the power to break up cells.

The entire class of immune bodies goes by the general name of antibodies. At present they are the keys to immunization.

But their production and use is complicated. Hence the first isolation of one of them in pure, crystalline form is important because it will enable scientists to study the chemical composition of an agglutinin and possibly to produce them artificially at some future date.

Scientists have believed that all agglutinins are proteins. This first one found is definitely protein.

Announced in 1896.

The existence of agglutinins was first announced in 1896 by Gruber and Dunham in a German scientific publication. They found the first bacterial agglutinins.

The fact that certain beans contain certain substances which cause red blood corpuscles to stick together has been known also for a long time.

Isolation of the jack bean agglutinin at Cornell was due to an incident in another laboratory. Prof. Sumner in 1926 isolated the first enzyme, urease, from jack beans. He and Dr. Howell has been using these beans to extract pure urease, which physicians use in tests for nephritis and Brights' disease.

In another laboratory the workers reported this urease caused blood

U. S. Pay Restoration Takes Effect Today

Pay increases for Government employes and railroad workers throughout the United States became effective today. To each group will be restored the last 5 per cent of their depression pay cuts.

In Washington, more than 115,000 workers will benefit from the Government pay increase ordered by Congress. It is estimated that this increase will total $10,500,000 a year, or $433,333 each pay day. The first pay day on which the increase will show up in salary payments will be April 15.

A total of 960,000 railroad workers will benefit from the pay restoration. The increase will restore the pay of the workers to the 1931 level. In 1932 their wages were cut 10 per cent. Last July one fourth of the cut was restored and one fourth was restored January 1. It is estimated that the latest wage restoration will cost the railroads $80,000,000 a year.

The pay restoration to Government employes is the third they have received. Their salaries originally were reduced 15 per cent as an economy measure. The average increase to each employe is estimated at $92.75 a year.

Test NRA Law Or Abandon It, Industry Asks

Liberty League Also Joins Demand for Proof of Act's Legality.

By Felix Bruner.

The demand that constitutionality of the NRA be tested in the Supreme Court before Congress acts on the Administration bill for a two-year extension of the recovery act was growing yesterday.

The American Liberty League, in a statement condemning price fixing, declared that "an early decision on the constitutionality of the national industrial recovery act is highly desirable."

Citing the intent of the Government not to permit an appeal of the Belcher lumber code case, C. L. Bardo, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, in another statement, declared that this course "will create a public impression that it fears a test of its questioned authority, yet insist on the exercise of doubtful powers."

Meanwhile, Senator Clark (Democrat), Missouri, and Senator Hastings (Republican), Delaware, were preparing to push their resolution calling on Attorney General Cummings to continue prosecution of the Belcher case. Cummings recently announced his intention to drop the case, thus preventing a Supreme Court test of the NRA before next fall.

12 Courts Say No.

The Senate Finance Committee planned to continue its NRA investigation today with indications that at the conclusion of the hearings major changes may be made in the Administration bill. The committee has made it clear that it has not passed on the bill, but that it has submitted the measure as a basis for future action.

"Eighteen Federal courts have handed down decisions denying the

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Registration of a $73,000,000 refunding mortgage bond issue by the Southern California Edison Co., Ltd., of Los Angeles, with the Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday brought the total security registration for March to the unexpectedly large total of $281,000,000.

The Southern California Edison's proposed issue of $73,000,000 of 25-year 3¾ per cent bonds was the largest ever registered under the 1933 securities act. It was the fifth issue of more than $20,000,000, each registered during March.

The record of security registrations for last month was taken as conclusive evidence that the activity in the capital issues market manifested early in March was not a flash-in-the-pan movement, but will be sustained, with the possibility, despite a comparatively bad showing in January and February, of $1,000,000,000 as the total for this year.

When Swift & Co. filed a registration for a $43,000,000 issue, followed a day later by registration by the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. of a $45,000,000 issue, SEC members predicted the total for the month would reach $150,000,000 and indicated the probability that from now on registrations would average $150,000,000 a month.

Landis Hails Record.

Consequently the figures for the full month have surprised even SEC members. Commissioner James M. Landis, speaking for the agency, yesterday hailed the March record as "further evidence for the belief that many American businesses have decided that the time is ripe for undertaking to refund old issues at lower interest rates."

"Though some let-up in the volume of registrations may occur during the coming month," Landis asserted, "no significant indications of any real decline in activity on the part of prospective registrants are as yet apparent."

In the face of the caution expressed by Landis, reports from the financial centers would indicate an increased acceleration in the refunding of securities into lower interest rate obligations. For instance, it is reported from New York that the Duquesne Light Co. of Pennsylvania has under consideration refunding $70,000,000 of 4½ per cent outstanding bonds.

Cheap Money Mart.

It is also reported that Armour & Co. is considering refunding $42,000,000 of 5½ per cent bonds and $38,000,000 of 4½ per cent bonds. Visitors to Wall street assert that almost every investment house there is negotiating on one or more refunding issues.

All but a small part of the issues registered in the last month represent refunding operations, brought about by the opportunity of reducing interest rates in the existing cheap money market. Southern California Edison, for instance, will save $855,000 a year in interest rates, not taking into account the cost of the refunding operation. The chance to make such large savings has had the effect of breaking down the adversion which corporation directors have manifested toward signing the SEC registration statements and subjecting themselves to liabilities for untrue statements. New capital issues are expected to follow these refunding operations in short order, since the fear of liability under the 1933 securities act is held to be one of the major deterring factors toward such activity.

Landis pointed out that the March

Planes Lock Wings Hundreds See 2 Die

By the Associated Press.

Corpus Christi, Tex., March 31. Jack Barstow, noted as a glider pilot, and Jack Cowgill, Corpus Christi newspaper reporter, were killed in a spectacular mid-air collision over the heads of several hundred horrified spectators at the Municipal Airport late today.

The plane piloted by Barstow, with Cowgill as a passenger, locked wings with another, flown by Eddie Johnson, airport manager, in a race with a third plane around the field.

The collision occurred directly over the heads of the spectators and only a few hundred feet up, but their momentum carried the planes away from the crowd and saved further casualties.

Barstow's plane was demolished as it smashed to the ground in the middle of the field. Johnson's ship landed in a field nearby. It also was damaged, but Johnson escaped with minor injuries.

Barstow was associated with Col. Lindbergh in glider experiments at San Diego, Calif., in 1930.

Elmhurst, Ill., March 31 (U.P.). Two men were killed today when their small monoplane spun into the ground at the airport from 250 feet. The dead were L. W. Abbott, 32, pilot and owner, and Claude Moore, 24, passenger, both of Chicago.

Cherry Blooms Greet Pilgrims In a Downpour

Many Motorists and a Few Pedestrians Admire the Blossoms' Beauty.

Washington's great cherry blossom spectacle was a victim of circumstances beyond man's control yesterday, but despite the driving rainstorm thousands of persons visited East Potomac Park to see the mass of blossoms whose brilliance even the heavy-hanging clouds could not dim.

But only those fortunate enough to find automobile transportation braved the continued downpour in any great numbers. Park police, who annually tabulate statistics on such matters, said that not more than 500 pedestrians made pilgrimage to the world-famous beauty spot.

Autoists were many, but even they were far below expectations. Nearly 20,000 cars, many from long distances, made the slow passage around the basin before 6 o'clock, the Park Police reported. Washington police officials, who kept count at the corner of Fourteenth and Water streets, checked off 2,444 cars in one hour, an average of 40 cars a minute. That was about midday, when traffic was at its peak.

Traffic Well Handled.

No difficulty was encountered in handling the traffic situation, police of both the District and the Park system reported. Extra patrolmen, who had been stationed at downtown crossings, reported they found little to do except try to keep their feet dry.

Many from out of town, who came by bus or train to see the famed Surugadai-nioi and Someiyoshimo, as the fruitless trees which frame the Tidal Basin in clouds of white are called in their native Japan, resorted to taxi

Long Charges 3d-Party Plan To Roosevelt

Says President Intended to Run if He Had Lost '32 Nomination.

Terms New Deal 'Prince Charming, Blue Buzzard Government.'

By the Associated Press.

Senator Huey P. Long last night declared that President Roosevelt "gave us to understand" he would run as a third party candidate if the 1932 convention failed to nominate him.

Long challenged the President to deny it.

Ignoring both the others in the debating triumvirate, Father Charles E. Coughlin and Hugh S. Johnson, Long concentrated in his speech over the Columbia Broadcasting System on the Roosevelt Administration, dubbing it the "prince charming administration" and the "blue buzzard government."

Talks of "Share-Our-Wealth."

The bulk of his talk, however, was given over to expounding his "share-our-wealth" plan.

Himself mentioned as a possible head of a third party presidential ticket in 1936, Long said:

"Now the Roosevelt brigade is sounding out the cry that they very much fear a third party in the United States will upset their staying in office. They ought to be the last to talk about a third party.

"When Roosevelt was making all his promises before his nomination in Chicago, and it looked like we would not be able to hold the thing in line, he gave us to understand he would run as a third party candidate if he failed to secure the nomination, and had asked a member of the United States Senate to be his running mate. Let him deny that.

"St. Vitus Dance Party."

"They ought not to try to call themselves the Democratic Party. The Roosevelt Administration should be properly named the St. Vitus dance party."

After he had reviewed his share the wealth program, Long launched out on criticism of the Roosevelt Administration and its policies.

Charging that the Roosevelt Administration had drifted from the principle on which America was founded, Long said:

"Now, after having three years of Mr. Hoover's depression, we are in the third year of the much worse Roosevelt depression, and we can look back and see that these Roosevelt recovery schemes were just as much in the direction of recovery as it would be to take the wheels off an automobile to make it run faster."

Assails Banking Law.

Long charged that the banking law of the Administration "ruthlessly and cruely drove thousands of banks to the wall and caused millions of bank depositors to lose everything they had."

The Roosevelt economy act cut allowances for disabled soldiers and salaries of Government employes, he said, then continued:

"Then the third thing this prince charming administration gave us was that beloved Blue Eagle, or blue buzzard, known as the NRA. No man could run a peanut stand or a power house without he was regulated by an NRA code. * * *

"When the NRA reached the Supreme Court, when we would be told whether it was constitutional or not (and it has been declared unconstitutional by any number of Federal courts and State courts) Mr. Roosevelt's administration ap-

Belgian Chief Devalues Belga By 28 Per Cent

Van Zeeland Appeals for Calm; Trading Resumes on Bourse Today.

By the Associated Press.

Brussels, March 31.—In a fervid "keep calm" appeal to the country Premier Paul van Zeeland urged Belgians tonight to leave monetary and banking problems to be dealt with by his new cabinet's program which includes 28 per cent devaluation of the currency.

"The franc should buy as much merchandise as it did a year ago," the young American-educated leader declared. "Stop thinking of the monetary question. We are here to defend the franc and your savings. Keep calm!"

A new royal decree published at the same time provides that transactions for the purchase or sale of foreign currencies against banknotes will be carried through by the exchange equalization fund on the basis of 0.150632 grammes of fine gold per belga (The monetary unit for foreign exchange.)

The scale of new exchange weights shows the United States dollar equals 5.899 belgas, or 29.49 Belgian francs (the belga was quoted last week as worth 20.999 cents in United States dollars).

The franc is thus attached to gold again on the basis of a fixed belga.

When the exchange opens tomorrow after three days of suspended operations the equalization fund will stand guard. The government has taken strong measures to prevent exploitation in the crisis, issuing a warning that rises in retail prices will immediately be checked and offenders punished.

Approval of his program by the Chamber and Senate left Van Zeeland free to carry out his policy aiming at rehabilitation of the country's economic and financial condition and starts tomorrow on the road to what it was hoped would lead to recovery.

The 28 per cent devaluation allows a margin of 2 per cent from the maximum for which authority was sought from Parliament.

The bourse, closed for three days, will reopen tomorrow with exchange control functioning on the basis of the decreed devaluation.

It will be necessary to adjust prices to meet the new monetary level, it was expected, and there were reports that many orders to buy government stocks already had been received from abroad.

Anglo-Russian Parleys Seal Unity; Nazi Draft Of 8,500,000 Reported

'Lost' Titian Madonna Is Thought Located

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31.—A worn, discolored canvas which its owners believe is a famous "lost" Titian Madonna, and two other paintings supposedly by the great Venetian painter have been brought here for expert opinion.

The paintings are the property of Henry Cini, of Stafford Springs, Conn., who is sure they are not only genuine Titians but worth $1,500,000, too.

For 119 years the three dingy canvases have been stored in a vault in Connecticut. A yellowed document in Italian, possessed by Cini, states that they were acquired by his great-great-grandfather in 1816.

Several experts who have seen them have pronounced them "very valuable" and expressed the opinion that at least the Madonna is a real Titian.

The "lost" Titian Madonna has been the despair of connoisseurs for many years. Among those who have thought they had it are Count Bethlen, of Hungary; Bela Walz, of Leeds, England, and George de Ghika, Hungarian Consul in New York.

War Lords Chosen For New Council

Ludendorf and Seeckt Head New Move for National Defense.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 31.—British press dispatches said tonight 8,500,000 men are likely to be called up for military training in Adolf Hitler's aggressive campaign for a "Germany rearmed."

Young Germans from the class of 1915, totaling 580,000, will report tomorrow for medical examinations at barracks throughout the Reich under the military conscription law of March 16, said information received here.

The British press dispatches in asserting Germany has 8,500,000 men subject to call to the colors said the following figures were taken from the Reich statistical yearbook of 1933, by classes:

The new defense laws, it was further learned, will announce the creation of a "national council for defense," or which Gen. Erich Ludendorf is slated to become one of the most influential members, along with Gen. Kurt von Seeckt, who has been called back from China.

Spread Out Draft.

Although no details of how the actual conscription will be carried out have been published, it was learned from a reliable Berlin souce that the 580,000 youths will be enrolled in batches so that their actual joining up will be spread over several weeks.

The Brown-Shirted Storm Troop army will not be dissolved, it was learned. It will be shorn of any military character, but will remain a crack troop organization with sports training. Its task will be to wage Germany's political war.

The actual numerical strength of the German armed forces, it is estimated now in reliable sources, is mounting near to 750,000 than the 500,000 estimated on March 16. There are to be 21 infantry regiments in every army corps.

At least 300,000 of the 580,000 answering the call tomorrow will be kept under the colors, it was stated, and new barracks thrown up throughout the Reich will be ready to house them indefinitely.

It was stated the 1901 class will be called up October 1, 1935, and another class on April 1, 1936.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 31.—Official quarters froze into virtual silence when questioned today on London reports that 580,000 German youths will be called up tomorrow for medical examination under the military conscription law.

"We do not know anything about it," was the reply.

Joint Communique of 2 Powers Reveals Security Accord.

Press Again Blasts German 'Revenge'

Charges Plans Against France, Belgium and Czechoslovakia.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, March 31.—Capt. Anthony Eden, Great Britain, is in agreement with Josef Stalin and Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff that the nations should go ahead with building up a European security arrangement on the basis of the London peace plan, a joint communique announced tonight.

The first official account of the joint conferences here, issued as Eden was leaving for Warsaw to continue his peace tour, followed a new blast at Germany in the Soviet press with the sharp warning that the Reich has plans for revenge on France, Belgium and Czechoslovakia.

Emphasize the League.

Tonight's communique said all parties in the conference finished yesterday were of the opinion that "it is more than ever necessary to pursue the endeavor to promote the building up of a system of collective security in Europe as contemplated in the Anglo-French communique of February 3 and in conformity with the League of Nations."

The communique said Russia and England found "that there was at present no conflict of interests between the two governments and that this fact provides a firm foundation for development of truthful collaboration between them in the cause of peace."

Particular emphasis was placed upon the League of Nations. The communique said Eden had informed Litvinoff concerning his talks with Hitler in Berlin and that "it was agreed that these talks had helped to clarify the European situation."

The official Russian press declared Hitler turned down all the proposals put forth by the British in the Berlin discussions.

Equal Security Is Aim.

The communique, in the opinion of observers, indicated that the British were ready to lend their support to a European security arrangement whether Germany participated or not. It made clear, however, that Germany will have an opportunity to enter the arrangement if she wishes.

"It was emphasized in the conversations (with Eden) by Stalin, Molotoff and Litvinoff," said the communique, "that the organization of security in eastern Europe and the proposed pact of mutual assistance do not aim at isolation or encirclement of any state but at the creation of equal security for all participants, and that the participation in the pact of Germany and Poland would therefore be welcomed as affording the best solution to the problem."

It said both countries, recognizing that the integrity and prosperity of each is to the advantage of the Text of Anglo-Russian Communique On Conference for Europe's Security

By the United Press.

Moscow, March 31.—The text of the joint Anglo-Russian communique on the peace conference, issued tonight, follows:

Conversations took place in Moscow in the last few days between Capt. Anthony Eden, British lord privy seal, and Maxim Litvinov, commissar for foreign affairs, concerning the principal elements in the present international situation, including the proposed eastern European pact and other questions set forth in the Anglo-French communique of February 3, as well as concerning further development and improvement of Anglo-Soviet relations.

During the visit, Capt. Eden was received by Josef Stalin and Premier Vischeslav Molotoff and was able to exchange views with them on the same subjects.

In the course of the conversations, which were conducted throughout in an atmosphere of complete friendliness and frankness, Capt. Eden informed M. Litvinoff of recent talks between the British ministers and the German government.

It was agreed the talks had helped clarify the European situation. Capt. Eden and Messrs. Stalin, Molotoff and Litvinoff believe that in the present international situation it is more than ever necessary to pursue the endeavor to promote the building up of a system of collective security in Europe, as contemplated in the Anglo-French communique of February 3, and in conformity with the principles of the League of Nations.

"Messrs. Stalin, Molotoff and Litvinoff emphasized that the conversations on the organization of security in east Europe and the proposed pact of mutual assistance do not aim at the isolation or encirclement of any states, but the creation of equal security for all participants, wherefore the participation of Germany and Poland in the pact would be welcomed as affording the best solution of the problem.

The representatives of the two governments are happy to note the result of this full, frank exchange of views. There is at present no conflict of interests between the two governments on any of the main issues of international policy. This fact provides a firm foundation for the development of fruitful collaboration between them in the cause of peace.

They are confident that both countries, recognizing the integrity and prosperity of each is advantageous to the other, will govern their mutual relations in that spirit of collaboration and loyalty to obligations assumed by them which is inherent to their common membership in the League of Nations.

In the light of these considerations, Capt. Eden and Messrs. Stalin, Molotoff and Litvinoff are confirmed in the opinion that friendly cooperation of the two countries in the general work for the collective organization of peace and security is of primary importance for the furtherance of international efforts to this end.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31. Trustees of the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation today announced the awarding of fellowships for 1935 to 47 American scholars and artists.

The fellowships, carrying stipends normally amounting to $2,000, are granted annually to assist researchers and creative workers who have accomplished distinguished, original work in scholarship or the arts and who are prepared to extend their work in significant directions."

Recipients of the eleventh annual series of fellowships include three Negroes and one Japanese. Five are women. They are divided as follows: Eight artists, four music composers, four persons active in theatrical arts, one poet, three novelists, two literary critics and 25 scholars who plan research in as many fields of knwledge.

Dr. Goddard will write a book on the science of tracing discharged bullets or shells back to the weapons from which they were fired.

The 1935 fellows include:

Dr. William C. Boyd, of Boston, who will make a comparative study of the blood types of living and ancient Egyptians.

'F. C. H.' and Son to Die Today According to Notes of Father

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 1 (Midnight).—The minute and the hour hands have just come together at the top of the clock, and the busy little hand in its own circle at the bottom is racing around, marking off the seconds of the day which "F. C. H." has set for double death.

Since the day more than a week ago that "F. C. H." wrote to a local broadcasting station announcing he had set April 1 as the day to kill his little child and himself, police have been seeking some clue to his identity. They confessed last night they had been unsuccessful.

"Since my wife died," the man wrote, "I have given mature consideration to the question of continued life, and I can see no reason for it."

He had decided, therefore, he wrote to die; and he said he was writing to the broadcasting station in the hope it would include on a certain program some discussion of death and eternity.

In Selma, Ala., today a widow prays. Two years ago her husband was an "F. C. H."—a man confessing himself whipped by life. He killed himself.

There have been two letters from "F. C. H." The first told of his determination to kill his son and himself. The second asked the broadcaster not to try and find him, for his mind was made up.

If—and it is not unlikely—the letters were a hoax; and if the man writes in today and says, in effect, "April fool!" then he can have and welcome whatever fun there may be in the knowledge that a great many people have been concerned over his threat of double murder.

If—and this is likely too—the letter was sincere; and if none of the efforts made to dissuade him have been of any avail; then—well then—he must die, and the little child must die.

And if he reasons so shallowly as to believe the lark no longer sings because he can not hear it—then he chose well when he picked for the date of self-destruction the day of all fools.

The hour and the minute hands no longer stand, like arms raised in supplication, at the top of the clock face.

The merry little second hand goes racing around, turning present into past and ticking away "F. C. H.'s" day of death or—if he's that kind of a fellow—his day of cruel, macabre jest.

$50,000 Jewels Taken From Lord, N.Y. Broker

New York, March 31 (AP).—The New York Daily News says that burglars on March 10 took jewelry worth $50,000 from the home of J. Couper Lord, insurance broker. The robbery was not made public, it is said, in the hope that a reward might bring the return of the jewels.

Listed in the haul are platinum chains, pendants and brooches set in diamonds and emeralds, jeweled cuff links, bracelets and wrist watches. There were 31 pieces of jewelry in all.

"Perfect Hand" Wins 5 Cents.

New York, March 31 (U.P.).—Steve Gegus, advertising man, accepted condolences tonight after holding the perfect poker hand—a royal spade flush. He won exactly 5 cents on the miracle hand, and lost $2.80 on the evening's play.

Works Tangle Waits Solution By Roosevelt

Congress ExpectsExecutive to Send Word Today on Labor Clause.

By the Associated Press.

Congress awaits today definite word from President Roosevelt on what he wants done to untangle the labor snarl over the $4,880,000,000 relief bill.

Democratic leaders said privately that Mr. Roosevelt opposes the controverted Senate amendment requiring that 33 1-3 per cent of advances on non-Federal projects be spent for direct labor. This was written in during the conference on the measure.

But information as to whether he would be willing to accept the provision to get the long delayed measure through was lacking and leaders said they wanted direct word from the President before taking action.

An expression of the Chief Executive's opinion, Speaker Byrns said, was expected before House Democratic leaders meet this morning to determine what course to pursue.

Rests With Senate, Byrns Says.

"It is known," Speaker Byrns said, "that the President is opposed to the wage amendment and the Senate amendment requiring Senate confirmation of new officials. House conferees are willing to recede on these amendments and I am sure the House also is willing. Therefore, the matter rests entirely with the Senate."

The Senate conferees headed by Senator Glass (Democrat), Virginia, who is opposed to the bill, were said by an Administration Senate leader to be unwilling to yield.

On the other hand, this spokesman, who declined to be quoted, said a majority of Senate sentiment was opposed to retention of the wage amendment because it would "cause trouble in making loans to political subdivisions for work relief projects."

Chairman Buchanan (Democrat), Texas, of the House Appropriations Committee, obviously weary of the dispute, said "we are going to do something Monday; we are going to dispose of the bill, one way or another."

Senators Map Attack.

On the Senate side, Administration strategists discussed a plan to knock out the wage amendment, inserted by the Senate conferees, on a point of order, should the House adopt the conference report. Another plan considered was to have the House and Senate adopt the conference report and then pass a special resolution kicking out the wage provision.

Secretary Ickes, who last night messaged to President Roosevelt, in Southern waters, a plea to back him in his fight against the wage provision, was noncommittal. However, in another high Administration quarter it was made clear that Mr. Roosevelt would make known his views after he had received full information on the controversy.

Democratic leaders said a break in the stalemate over the relief measure would allow action on other important Administration legislation asked by the President.

Far Behind in Legislation.

Turning into the fourth month of its session, in which none of the major Administration bills has been written into law, Congress already is talking about a further slash in the legislative program.

Committees are far behind in the preparation of bills asked by the President. The utility holding company measure, bank law revision, extension of NRA, increased capital of the Home Owners Loan Corporation and social security are still awaiting action.

Byrns said the social security bill would be brought up in the House a week hence, while the McSwain bill to take the profits out of war is to be considered Wednesday.

The Senate today takes up the Copeland pure food and drug bill, advocated by the Administration, and hearings will be resumed before the Finance Committee on the Harrison bill to extend the NRA for two years.

Shops Guarded In Los Angeles

Police Patrol Meat Stores Under Boycott Which Is Laid to 'Reds.'

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, March 31.—Police guarded closed markets today in the Boyle Heights district of Los Angeles, where housewives struck yesterday against meat price increases.

Sabbath quiet prevailed and only one street "argument" was reported by the officers in the district, where shops usually remain open on Sundays.

Picketing last night forced kosher markets to close their doors as women bearing placards importuned customers against buying meat. A few packages of meat were snatched from housewives who ignored the strike.

The Boyle Heights "boycott" was ordered after a mass meeting called by the united conference against the high cost of living.

"We demand that butcher shops close in order to force packers to reduce prices," explained Mrs. Minnie Rubin, conference chairman. Mrs. Claire Lee Purdy, county secretary of the Public Works Unemployment League, issued instructions that all picketing be conducted on a "peaceful" basis.

Packers have declared meat prices are still 25 per cent below the 1930 level, and that the protest by housewives is "hysterical."

"Agitation against meat prices has been started by the Communist element," said J. A. McNaughton, vice president of the Union Stock Yards. Spokesmen who said they represented Polish and Ukranian groups passed word at the mass meeting that preceded last night's picketing.

Chickens Come Home to Roost; The New NRA Bill; Tugwells Return to the Headlines.

By Raymond Clapper

NUMEROUS embarrassments which the Administration is suffering just now are chickens coming home to roost.

One of them is the new NRA bill. When Congress was asked to extend NRA, a great to-do was made of how this time Congress would be allowed to write its own bill. The Administration would make recommendatoins, but Congress would write the bill. There was general suspicion that NRA lawyers had drafted a bill, but this always was diplomatically denied. So the Senate Finance Committee began holding hearings. Soon it developed that many members of the committee were so hazy about NRA that they couldn't ask very good questions. One session was taken up with a Police Court third degree of Board Member Sidney Hillman, who was suspected of having in his early youth committed the offense of having been born in Russia.

The hearings went on but nothing was happening except increased demoralization of NRA. Strike threats grew more menacing. The lumber code authority virtually folded up after the Government abandoned its original intention of pressing for a test of the Belcher case, thus leaving unchallenged the opinion of the lower court that so far as the lumber code was concerned NRA was out of bounds.

Finally Richberg, alarmed, met in executive session with the Senate committee. The chairman of the committee then rushed to the Senate and introduced an NRA bill which he had been carrying around in his pocket for weeks. The Administration was unable to carry on its pretense of not having drafted an NRA bill any longer. Senators naturally feel they have been tricked.

* * * *

Another chicken that has come home to roost bears a strong resemblance to Dr. Rex Tugwell.

Just as the magazines are reaching the newsstands with numerous articles about the fade-out of the Brain Trust, indicating that Mr. Roosevelt is through with theorists and has tied up with "practical men" in a move to the right, the name of Dr. Rex Tugwell comes crashing through into the newspaper headlines again.

Under the new works program he is to have more power and influence than ever before. This comes as a surprise after he was supposed to have disappeared from the picture. He had disappeared, but he was busy behind the scenes all the time. The only thing was that the Administration wanted nothing to get out about it until after the $4,880,000,000 works appropriation was safely in hand. There are worse people in public life than Dr. Tugwell. If it was the wish that he have a large hand in the works program why make a secret of it and then, when the information leaks out prematurely, try to cover it up with a smoke screen and have Senators and Representatives feeling that they have been tricked?

* * * *

These are sample incidents. The fundamental thing which is destroying Administration morale in Congress is that Mr. Roosevelt, in asking the largest appropriation ever made in a single bill, refused to give Congress any inkling of his plans.

To the end it has been Administration strategy to pretend that nothing was decided, when, as a matter of fact, Hopkins and Tugwell and their assistants have been working like boys in a sand bank planning what would be done. As they should. With unemployment as serious as it is, why shouldn't the Administration, having decided to ask for $5,000,000,000, and knowing it was likely to get it, go right ahead making its plans? By the time the first NRA code was passed, Hugh Johnson, who had been on the job for weeks, already was well on the way with the cotton textile code negotiations. He had his skeleton set-up already at work.

The Administration was thoroughly justified in setting to work at once to plan what it would do with its gigantic works relief appropriation. But why attempt to deny that it has lifted a finger? Why refuse to give Congress any idea as to what was planned?

* * * *

By the tactics used, Democratic members have been alienated. Even the Senators and Representatives in charge of the legislation have no enthusiasm for it. There was deliberate sabotage attempted in the conference committee and nobody was sufficiently interested to give a damn.

That is the state of mind that the Administration has put its own people into in Congress. Most of the trouble comes from not being frank, from trying to be foxy. If leaders had come out frankly and said what they had in mind, and what they had not been able to work out, they would have inspired confidence instead of distrust. There wouldn't have been so many chickens coming home to roost. There couldn't be.

* * * *

There was a reason for the call of the comptroller of the currency Saturday for the condition of all National banks as of March 4. It will give a comparison of bank conditions in the black days at the end of the Hoover Administration with those at the end of this Administration's second year.

* * * *

The Immigration Bureau dropped its deportation case against John Strachey, British author and parlor Communist, when it found that was the quickest way to get him out of the country.

He was ready to sail the other day in accordance with his previous schedule, but had the Government's case been pressed he would have had to remain here weeks, perhaps months, until it was determined whether he be deported.

So the young man, who arrived unknown except among a few highbrows, sailed away in the spotlight of national fame, announcing that he hoped to come back after writing another book. He should want to come back. Due to the Government's attempt to suppress him from saying on a platform what was in his books on sale in every bookstore, he had profited handsomely through lecture fees and royalties.

The stupidities of censorship have helped many a struggling propagandist to fame and influence, a fact which is known to everyone. But when you give a Government official the power of suppression his mind seems to go blank.

So Mme. Perkins has put the Strachey papers away in the Labor Department file marked "opened by mistake."

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace still wakes up with the chickens, walks from Wardman Park to his office, and annoys his assistants by calling conferences for 7:30 a. m. They keep telling him that this makes him sleepy in the afternoon and that his resistance is worn down so much by that time that things will be put over on him. It hasn't worked. The city-reared farm experts still have to reach the office before breakfast.

Ten Facing Death In Kidnaping Trial

7 Men, 3 Women to Face Jury in New York.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31.—Seven men and three women will go on trial for their lives in Federal court Monday, the first person to be tried in New York under the new Lindbergh kidnap law.

If convicted, they face death for the kidnaping and torture last August of two seamen, Pierre Guette and Guillaume Rozen. Guette was released within 48 hours.

Rozen was held in Brooklyn and Philadelphia for a month in an attempt, Federal agents said, to force him to admit stealing a packet of narcotics. Rozen then was released and told of having been alternately strung up by the neck and lowered just as he was strangling.

Federal agents raided a Brooklyn home atnd arrested Salvatore Mancuso and his wife, Nellie, last September. Rozen identified them as two of his captors. Later two other women and six other men were arrested and indicted.

Two Beautiful Easter Gowns Given to First Lady by Filipinos

By the Associated Press.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt has two beautiful new Easter gowns—a good-will gift from the Philippines.

They are fashioned of the most exquisite Filipino fabrics, and designed by Lloyd Taylor, Philippine-born New York designer, whose father, Carson Taylor, publishes the Manila Daily Bulletin, only American paper in the islands.

Vincente Villamin, attorney and economist here with the Philippine delegation concerned with constitution signing and setting up a new commonwealth government, told how Mrs. Roosevelt happened to get the dresses.

"Three or four months ago Mrs. Roosevelt in a magazine article urged the women of America to think of the Philippines, its people and its problems," he said. "I then started a contribution among representative Americans and Filipinos who wanted to show their respect and appreciation to the First Lady of the Land. Mr. Taylor gave his work free."

The native costume was inspiration for one afternoon gown, made of a gossamer-sheer fabric called "pina," pineapple fibre hand-woven by Philippine women. The draped neckline was adapted from the "panuelo," a three-cornered piece of material worn over the shoulders. The long and flowing skirt was trimmed with real princesse lace, made by the Belgian sisters of the Tondon Convent in Manila. The dress is a natural ecru, with blue flowers at the throat.

The other gown is a dinner dress of blue "jusi," another Philippine material as sheer as pina, but silkier and softer. It is sleeveless, but with cape-effect, with a brown taffeta bow holding down the cowl neck.

The delegation making the presentation Saturday included Mrs. Key Pittman, wife of the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee; Mrs. William H. Larrabee, wife of a member of the House Insular Affairs Committee; and Mrs. F. A. Delgado, wife of a commissioner from the Philippines.

RFC Actions Plunge It Deep Into Business

Jones Tells of Utility Deal, Wide Ramifications of Loans to Firms.

By the Associated Press.

The world's largest bank—the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—is going more and more into the Nation's business as borrowers find it impossible to repay or the agency has to step in to save concerns from collapse.

This is agreed to by Jesse H. Jones, big jovial chairman of the board of the corporation, who recently said:

"It looks like we are in the utility business whether we want to be or not."

This statement came as a result of disclosure that a note of the Webster Corporation, secured by stock of the Utilities Securities Corporation, was overdue and that Harley Clarke, of Chicago, head of the company, had sought unsuccessfully to have it extended. The note was given the corporation as part of the security for the $90,000,000 loan to the Central Republic Bank & Trust Co., of Chicago, commonly known as the Dawes bank.

Could Take Plants.

As a ramification of this, the corporation could, if it desired, take over control of around 2,000 public utility plants throughout the Middle West, including large corporations serving St. Louis and Indianapolis and other large Western and Middle Western cities.

The corporation today owns outright, or can control: Three insurance companies, one real estate mortgage loan company, one very profitable railroad, scores of national banks and 4,000,000 bales of cotton. It also has a hand in wineries, distilleries, machine shops, foundries and other business through its loans.

Following the best banking practices, Jones and the board of directors of the corporation insist on keeping in close touch with the security behind loans made by the corporation. The biggest and most important loans are negotiated through the chairman. He personally dickers with railroad officials and owners before any commitments are made and recently he has been insisting that arrangements must be made so that interest and other fixed charges of the borrowers are reduced.

General Business.

The corporation, founded during the Hoover administration as a means of aiding stricken banks, has gradually evolved into a general lending business in an effort to put the country back on its feet.

A year or so ago two big insurance companies in Baltimore needed reorganization. The corporation bought preferred stock in them and then insisted on putting its representatives in the companies, one of them as president and other as general counsel.

Out in Detroit last year the Detroit Life Insurance Co., to which the corporation had lent money, got into difficulties and was ordered sold by the courts. To protect its interest and policy holders, the corporation bid in the company and now owns and operates it.

In Chicago when banks were being reorganized, the corporation took the controlling interest in the Continental National Bank and put a former Treasury official in as president.

Scores of other banks passed into its control, but with the exception of seeing that friendly men are on the boards of directors the corporation, its officials say, has kept its hands out of the management.

Railroad Fails.

Three months ago the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad, now being reorganized, could not take up its option on the controlling stock of the highly profitable Denver & Salt Lake Railroad. The corporation lent them the money, took the stock as collateral, and then put a former director in as president of the road and other representatives among its operating officials.

Some of the loans develop unexpected angles. Recently revenue agents raided a large vinegar plant in New York State and reported they found thousands of gallons of alcohol and apple brandy upon which taxes had not been paid. Some time before the RFC had lent the owner of the company $40,000 as an aid in processing the apple crop into vinegar.

Lieut. Colonel on Spree Proves Only a Private

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31.—Robert Christopher Ermer, of New Haven, Conn., a private attached to Company B Sixty-sixth Infantry, Fort Meade, Md., awaited the arrival of military authorities today to take him back.

With $30, a lieutenant colonel's insignia, a pocketful of printed cards and a successful "line," Ermer enjoyed four weeks of Broadway's pleasures.

Police said he posed as "Lieut. Col. Rickenbacker, the great flier," and that his printed cards bore that legend.

Down to his last nickel last night he appealed to a restaurant owner who provided a bed for the youth and then notified police.

House to Drop $405,000,000 Army Program

Work-Relief Terms Bar Any Outlay for Military Euipment.

By the Associated Press.

A tacit decision not to press forward a $405,000,000 Army modernization program, despite the crisis in Europe, has been reached by the House Military Committee.

Representative Hill (Democrat), Alabama, chairman of a sub-committee that has been considering the plan, said yesterday the plan would be dropped because of an amendment to the $4,880,000,000 works-relief bill providing money shall not be expended for munitions and military equipment.

He added, however, that under the measure, now awaiting final action in both House and Senate, the President still could set aside $132,000,000 for Army housing and the building up of Army posts and National Guard camps as contemplated in the modernization scheme.

Air Funds Possible.

In addition, the Alabaman said, the bill is broad enough to permit use of $75,000,000 or $100,000,000 more for a series of powerful air bases to defend the Nation from any hostile thrusts.

Hill said it was "possible though highly improbable" that the modernization program would be put into a separate bill.

The modernization plan was designed to lift the Army to a peak in physical equipment that would assure its ability to handle any emergency that might arise. It was dropped into the hands of the military committee several weeks ago by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff.

At one time a resolution actually had been put into words in which the committee would have urged earnest consideration of the plan as a means of providing employment and relief under the $4,880,000,000 appropriation.

While the plan would hoist Army fighting efficiency, several House members said privately that the War Department was not disappointed with its treatment this session.

Supply Bill Cited.

The War Department appropriation bill, just sent to the White House, is one of the largest ever put through in peace time.

Congressional quarters said the measure gives the department the one thing it regarded as most essential to national welfare—a boost from 118,500 to 165,000 in the Army's man power.

The modernization program embraced $90,000,000 for airplanes, $45,000,000 for technical construction in the Air Corps, $45,000,000 for reserve ammunition, $80,000,000 for quarters and barracks, $37,000,000 for modernizing field artillery and ordnance, $35,000,000 for anti-aircraft artillery, $23,000,000 for coast defense, including Hawaii and the Canal Zone; $22,000,000 for motorization, $16,000,000 for mechanization, $6,000,000 for National Guard camps, and $8,000,000 for miscellaneous arms and equipment.

Rail Pensions' Decision Is Due In Court Today

High Tribunal Will Also Act on Frazier-Lemke Farm Moratorium.

By the Associated Press.

Two of the most controversial measures passed during the New Deal, the railroad pension act and the Frazier-Lemke farm moratorium measure, will be before the Supreme Court today.

The pension act is expected to be decided today when the court returns after a two weeks' recess. The District of Columbia Supreme Court held it unconstitutional, and the appeal was taken from that decision.

The measure provides for retirement—with pay—of railroad employes after 30 years of service, or after they reach the age of 65.

The carriers claimed that it was unconstitutional and that in addition its application would impose a financial burden upon them that they are not in condition to bear.

Farm Bill to Come Up.

After the court disposes of cases ready for decision, it will take up the Frazier-Lemke case for oral argument.

This act, passed in the closing days of the last session along with the railroad bill, gives mortgage-burdened farmers a five-year moratorium if they are unable to reach an agreement with their creditors.

The majority of the opinions in the lower courts have upheld the legislation, although several judges said they did so with regret, believing the law was unfair.

The railroad and mortgages measures are the only New Deal laws pending before the Supreme Court, with the exception of the Belcher case from Alabama.

The Department of Justice, however, has announced it would ask for the dismissal of this case, in which a lower Federal court held the lumber code and NRA unconstitutional.

Court May Deny Plea.

But the court may refuse to dismiss the Government's appeal and require it to go through with the case to a final decision. Ordinarily, however, the court accedes to such petitions for dismissal.

Thirty-two cases are in shape for disposal, although the court probably will not act upon them all today.

It is expected to decide, however, whether the death sentences imposed on Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, Negroes, convicted of assault in the famous Scottsboro case, stand.

Demand Will Exceed '29's Upon Recovery, U. S. Survey Reveals.

By Leon Du... Jr.

Declaring that business recovery will reveal "critical shortages" of electric power in almost every section of the United States, the Federal Power Commission yesterday called for early construction of private or public plants involving an expenditure of $300,000,000.

The use of electricity has grown to such an extent, even during the depression, the commission declared, that after normal industrial activity has been resumed "the demand for power will be at least 4,000,000 kilowatts in excess of that which existed in 1929." This is equivalent to 50 generating stations.

The need for new power plans, either hydro or steam, is set forth in the commission's first report on the national power survey, a portion of which was released to the press. The survey was ordered by President Roosevelt in August, 1933, and is the first study of power resources on a national scale.

Commission Cites Needs.

Asserting that little generating capacity has been added since 1930, the survey estimates that the output of existing plants will be 2,325,000 kilowats behind the demand if pre-depression industrial conditions suddenly return. Moreover, the commission points out, present plants rapidly are becoming obsolete.

"The only regions in which substantial surpluses of capacity now exist to meet normal demand," according to the survey, "are Florida, parts of Michigan and Illinois, an area along the lower Mississippi, parts of Texas, and North Dakota, Idaho, Utah, New Mexico, Montana, Washington, Minnesota and Oregon."

Grand Coulee, one of the vast New Deal dam-building projects, is in the State of Washington, where a surplus of power was found to exist, it was noted, while Bonneville is near Portland, Oreg. The Tennessee Valley was not mentioned in the press release, but the new dams being constructed there are not yet a factor in producing power.

Shortage Feared Near.

The conclusion of the survey that a great shortage of power might soon be experienced is the thesis upon which the Administration embarked upon its power expansion program, and to that extent was hailed in official quarters as a justification of the present dam-building efforts.

Results of the survey also were considered significant as revealing a possible New Deal intention to press ahead with the power program in other directions. The survey was referred to by Basil Manly, vice chairman of the commission, as "a chart for the future." Moreover, the pending $4,880,000,000 works bill, carrying $100,000,000 specifically for rural electrification, may soon be available.

The Government power plants now under construction will meet power shortages in certain areas, the report said, adding, however, that the regions of greatest industrial activity—the East and Middle West—will be unprepared in event of recovery.

"In view of the time required to plan and construct large generating plants, whether hydro or steam," it is stated, "early construction of new plants with an aggregate capacity of between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 kilowatts is imperative. This would involve capital expenditures of at least $30,000,000."

The survey emphasized that a power shortage would be "disastrous" in case of war. The report—now being completed by a special staff directed by Thomas R. Tate—designated no preference as between private or public plants—a battle which has raged for months with the New Deal aligned against the private utilities.

'5-10' Princess May Be Hermit In Reno Home

Divorce Colony Fears She May Refuse to Join in Night Life.

By the Associated Press.

Reno, March 31.—Visions of Princess Barbara Hutton Mdivani remaining a voluntary prisoner in her attorney's rambling old home and eschewing Reno's famed night life during her six weeks here were conjured up today by the divorce colony.

There was no sign of activity at the residence—that of Gerge B. Thatcher, her Reno attorney—today, 24 hours after the princess' arrival by airplane from New York to establish residence for a divorce from her royal husband, Alexis, Prince of Transcaucasian Georgia.

Sources close to her attorneys said she had employed two servants and would take her meals in the Thatcher home, remaining there with her stepmother, Mrs. Franklin Hutton. It was said she would not mingle with the night club crowd.

Lawyers Confer.

Thatcher and Millard Tompkins, the princess' New York lawyer, conferred on the divorce plans but maintained a rigid silence about everything relating to the case.

Informed there were rumors that Prince Alexis might contest Barbara's action, Tompkins said:

"I don't know anything about it."

It was said Tompkins probably would return to New York "in three or four days," leaving the matter in Thatcher's hands, for the time being, at least.

Home Focal Point.

Stirred by the presence of a princess—a $40,000,000 one—among them, the divorce seekers centered their attention on the Thatcher home but were left in the dark as to whether their contact with royalty would develop into anything more tangible.

They speculated on what her divorce grounds would be—incompatibility, desertion, cruelty, non-support or some other allegation. The allegation in most of the divorce cases here is cruelty.

The attractive young Woolworth heiress was tired and silent when she reached here yesterday and went directly to the Thatcher home. Watchers said she remained indoors.

Denounces Blue Eagle.

"In the meantime, they keep this unconstitutional form of blue buzzard Government running in the land because the ordinary man has not the money to spend to fight them through the courts, and they hope to bulldoze and browbeat their way over the suffering and distressed American people for another four years."

Long said in the last New York election, Roosevelt's forces quit the Democratic Party and ran a ticket "on a new party they organized which they called the 'Recovery Party.'

"They ought to have stayed quit, because they are anything else but Democrats," he asserted. "I look for this Roosevelt brain trust set to be the gypsy party in the next election, because the American people will want to make a set of gypsies out of them. Their campaign song ought to be 'Love Made a Gypsy Out of Me.'"

Chute Jumper Dies Testing Glider Wing

By the Associated Press.

Flint, Mich., March 31.—Floyd Davis, 22-year-old parachute jumper, fell 6,000 feet to his death at the city airport here today when one of his two parachutes fouled in a small glider wing he had fastened to his back. The second parachute was not opened.

Clyde Cole, airport manager, said Davis went aloft about noon with Pilot Gordon Helm to experiment with the glider wing in an effort to improve upon the "human bat" stunt of Clem Sohn, the Lansing, Mich., jumper, who recently exhibited his bat wings in Miami and New Orleans.

The glider wing, said Cole, was a 4-foot span of fabric which Davis had fastened to his back. He said before taking off that he hoped the wing would serve to guide his flight to earth and enable him to maneuver while descending.

At Meridian, Miss., a twister ripped the roof off the Gulf, Mobile & Northern depot, blew down telephone and telegraph wires, demolished a number of outhouses, uprooted trees and smashed windows. None was reported hurt in that area, however.

Late yesterday a tornado hit Longino, in Neshoba County, 40 miles north of here, but did little damage. It destroyed the home and barn of Walter Tucker and several outbuildings. No one was injured.

High winds broke plate glass at Newton, nine miles south of Decatur.

Dewey Hall, a farmer living near Monticello, was seriously injured and is not expected to live. He was rushed to a hospital at Brookhaven. His wife suffered serious cuts about the head from flying timbers when their home was demolished. No other persons were reported injured.

Houston, Tex., March 31 (AP).—Two persons, a Mexican woman and a Negro, were killed today as freakish windstorms tore across the Texas Gulf Coast. Slight property damage was caused in some south Texas areas and wire service was disrupted at several points.

The wind, which attained a velocity of 38 miles an hour, blew down a row of wire poles at Deepwater and one crashed through the house of Mrs. Petra Espinoss, 38, who was crushed to death as she slept.

Isaac Jones, 35, Negro, was electrocuted when he became entangled in wires blown down in a Houston street.

Disease Which Petrifies Flesh Believed Curbed a First Time

Calcinosis Arrested in California Woman, Physician Reports.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Los Angeles, March 31.—Calcinosis—a strange malady which turns the flesh of human beings into stone—is believed to have been arrested in a typical case for the first time in medical history.

Dr. Harry Foshay Walker, dietetic expert, who a month ago undertook to treat 23-year-old Rala Brayton, former artist's model, applying a diet of vegetables grown in ground from which calcium had been extracted, announced the progress of the disease has been "definitely arrested."

"Miss Brayton is entirely free from pain," he said. "She is able to walk and can move her hands. Life is returning to her muscle tissues."

The disease, of which there are only 38 known cases, never has been cured, as far as medical records can be verified, Dr. Walker, before undertaking Miss Brayton's case, had effected two cures in partial cases.

Miss Brayton, a slim, blonde girl, who quit modeling for artists two years ago when the disease began to affect her lower limbs, was able to sit up and even walk around the room.

"It is perfectly wonderful," she said, "just to believe again that I'm going to get well."

For two years she lay on a bed, her body tortured with pain, while her muscles gradually acquired a rock-like hardness, and her bones grew soft.

Now the calcium which filtered into the tissue due to a general toxic condition of her body, is being restored to the bone.

"The skin now is completely detached from the rock-like muscular tissues and these are softening," Dr. Walker said. "The progress is exactly as we hoped. The lack of calcium in the diet is causing the blood to reverse its former process, extracting it from the hardened tissue and apparently restoring it to the bone."

The physician explained that it would not be possible to determine whether a complete cure can be effected until the treatment is continued for some time.

"It is a slow natural process both ways. Tests of her blood for calcium content show a definitely increased content, which gave us the first distinct indication the treatment was accomplishing its purpose."

cabs to fulfil the purpose of their visit.

Hundreds of those who drove to the scene in the February-like weather found parking spaces for their cars and made quick forays to the grounds. With upturned coat collars they stood drinking in the beauty of the cold spring day. Some stood under umbrellas, entranced by the mists of white blossoms, as the rain poured unnoticed down their backs. But usually the spell was broken quickly and they returned to their cars.

Few Traffic Tangles.

Chilled policemen, their raincoats gleaming wet, swung their arms in vain attempts to keep warm, and not so vain attempts to keep traffic moving. While passage was slow around the basin, and cars moved at a snail's pace along Fourteenth street and across Highway bridge, there were surprisingly few traffic tangles.

Here and there visitors would walk through the rain and the chilling mist to some vantage point where they could focus cameras in the dwindling light. The lack of sunshine and contrasting shadows did not freeze the amateur photographers intent upon returning home with souvenirs and tangible proof of Washington's spring-time loveliness—even if the weather was far from seasonable.

The rain, which turned into mist from time to time, may have robbed the familiar springtide scene of much of its familiar glory, but the glistening rain turned the masses of blossoms into a field of moist, clinging snow.

Rain Does Little Damage.

Those who trudged through the chill day to the scene were rewarded by this sight, but there was slight pleasure in strolling beneath the fully opened blossoms. The rain did little damage to the petals, but here and there some fluttered to the ground. Park officials said that a similar storm a few days hence, however, would denude the trees.

The weather man predicted rain for today, with little change in temperature. He expected that the rain would let up around noon.

An indoor cherry festival was announced by the Citizen's Cherry Blossom committee. Special exhibits of Japanese art are being held in galleries, museums and libraries of the District and several talks before various organizations are scheduled.

District Commissioner M. C. Hazen, expressing his approval of this adjunct to the Tidal Basin display, said, "I am glad to know that a committee of citizens is planning to express appreciation of the Japanese cherry tree gift from Tokyo by arranging these special exhibits and talks."

The program was originated with the District of Columbia Committee on the causes and cures of war. Mrs. Esther C. Brunauer is chairman of the committee which includes Mrs. Florence B. Boekel, Mrs. Lawrence Koenigsberger, Mrs. E. R. Haas, Mrs. H. Chalmers, Mrs. H. F. Sawtell, Miss Margaret Jones, Miss Adele Ritzenberg, Dr. Charles Carhart, Mrs. J. A. Stone, Mrs. D. E. Yarnell and Miss Clara Saunders.

Test NRA Law Or Abandon It, Industry Urges

Liberty League Joins in Senators' Demand for Court Ruling.

power of Congress to regulate local operations, but despite this record, the Government has not sought to clarify its powers," Bardo said.

"Meanwhile Congress is being asked to act upon the extension of the NRA, the Wagner Labor Disputes bill, the 30-hour work week bill, the amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and other legislation involving exactly the same principles as those now in dispute—the right of the Federal Government to regulate strictly local affairs."

Inflation Attacked.

The Administration is seeking to answer this frequently voiced opposition by attempting to define, in the bill introduced last Friday, the kind of business that constitutes interstate commerce. The definition is so all-inclusive as to cover nearly every type of business.

"If the Government," Bardo continued, "believes it possesses the authority which is questioned, it ought to seek vindication in court or else it ought not merely to withdraw its appeal, but abandon the attempt to obtain enactment or execution of authority which it hesitates to submit to the scrutiny of our highest tribunal."

"The apparent disposition of the Administration to avoid a final ruling by the Supreme Court during its present term may serve to deprive citizens of their constitutional rights," the Liberty League statement said.

"The policy of delay places the Government in the position of attempting to enforce a law which according to decisions in several District courts is invalid.

"Extension of the present statute beyond its expiration date, June 16, 1935, should be on a basis to permit pending litigation to go forward to a final determination."

Hitting at price fixing, the league declared that this policy, whether instituted by the Government or by private groups, "causes the most vicious inflation." It declared that Government fixed prices are bound to be high enough to sustain the inefficient, while giving excessive rewards to the efficient.

"Honest Competition" Asked.

"Honest competition," the statement said, "can not exist under a regime of fixed prices; it can only prevail in an atmosphere of freedom."

Recent experimentation with price control and the experience of other nations, the league statement said, point to these conclusions:

"Controlled prices mean higher prices.

"With the possible exception of agricultural products, higher prices are likely to be harmful rather than helpful.

"Higher prices mean reduced consumption, a curtailment of production and an increase in unemployment.

"Prosperity of an industry is most certain if prices can be lowered and volume of production increased.

"Industries with the greatest flexibility in prices provide the most regular employment.

Claims Inefficient Aided.

"Controlled prices build up monopoly and prevent the competition necessary to the protection of the consumer and the small producer.

"Fixed prices encourage inefficiency in business.

"Interference with freedom of management through fixing of prices tends to destroy individual initiative and to fasten the blight of bureaucratic control upon industry.

"An increase in price in one industry causes higher prices in related industries.

"'Chiselers' and 'bootleggers' thrive under a system of controlled prices, making enforcement impossible."

Sees Recovery Retarded.

The league pointed out that while farm prices are slightly above prewar levels, the purchasing power of the farmer is only 80 per cent of his pre-war purchasing power, because of the high prices of commodities and equipment.

"Both outright price fixing and more moderate price-control schemes under the National Recovery Administration have retarded the recovery of agriculture," the statement said.

Directly attacking NRA, the league declared it had increased unit costs in industry and thus, causing high prices, nullified beneficial effects of wage increases.

Rubber Union Votes on Strike; Cheers Advocates of Walkout

By the Associated Press.

Akron, Ohio, March 31.—Union workers of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. cast ballots today on whether to strike, after loudly cheering speakers who urged that a strike be called.

The balloting took place at the headquarters of the Goodyear local of the United Rubber Workers Union, where the members were told they could have the full support of the American Federation of Labor.

Coleman C. Claherty, American Federation of Labor organizer who returned from a Washington conference with William Green, A. F. of L. president, said:

"In the event you decide to take direct action, I was told by William Green that the full strength of the American Federation of Labor will be behind you."

The union hall, which accommodates 1,200 persons, was filled and several hundred members waited outside for their turn to cast secret ballots.

At a mass meeting of union workers of the Firestone and Godrich plants, about 1,600 heard other speakers urge a strike and cheered at each mention of a strike vote.

Union workers of Goodrich and Firestone will vote next Sunday on whether to strike.

The unions have demanded that the three major tire concerns, which employ about 35,000 workers, sign an agreement with the union locals. The companies have refused written agreements, declaring the unions represent only a small minority.

At another meeting today about 300 wives of rubber workers in the Goodyear and other plants assembled to voice their opposition to a strike.

Union leaders said the ballot boxes for Godyear workers will be kept open until Tuesday night to give all union members a chance to vote. It was indicated the official results would not be announced immediately.

Green Says Employers Foment Akron Trouble

By the Associated Press.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, last night accused the country's largest tire makers of responsibility for a "bad situation" in the factories at Akron, Ohio, where a strike of rubber workers threatens, according to the Associated Press.

The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., cited for alleged violation of the recovery act yesterday by the National Labor Relations Board, "could prevent a strike if it would follow the decision of the board," asserted Green.

"The others," he continued, referring to the B. F. Goodrich and Goodyear Tire & Rubber companies, "are in the same boat. The facts are the same in each case."

The National Labor Relations Board, through its regional director at Cleveland, Ralph Lind, was keeping in constant touch with the situation at Akron. The board, which previously ordered elections of employe representatives at Firestone and Goodrich only to have them challenged in the courts, yesterday ruled Firestone in violation of the recovery act by fostering an employes' representation plan.

The walkout, Green said, would have to be approved by the American Federation of Labor, which he said would be guided by the "sentiment of the workers and the circumstances." He did not say how far the federation would back a possible strike.

Gypsies Sought In Futile Hunt For 'Sonny,' 4

Neighbors Watch River Rise for Trace of Lad at Covington.

By the Associated Press.

Covington, Va., March 31.—A fruitless search continued today for Frank (Sonny) Rose, 4 years old, who disappeared from his home near here Thursday.

Covington firemen, who have dragged the Jackson River for several miles near the Rose home, went out again this afternoon to resume the task, despite a heavy rain which muddied the river and caused it to rise. Neighbors kept a close watch along the river banks.

Bloodhounds brought here to aid in the search tracked the child to the neighborhood of the river, but not directly to the water's edge. This circumstance led to the theory that the child might have been abducted by a party of gypsies reported seen in the vicinity the afternoon he disappeared. Authorities pursued this clew, but without results so far.

"Sonny's" father, Garland Rose, is an official of the local bank.

H. Staley, of Jefferson County. Other officers named were: Vice president, Forrest Hammond; secretary, W. N. McClung, Berkeley County agricultural agent, and treasurer, G. H. Whiting, of Jefferson County.

Fight Impends In Mt. Rainier Mayoralty Poll

Mathias Again May Enter Field Against Pruitt, the Incumbent.

With registration for the Mount Rainier (Md.) mayoralty election set for April 8 and 16 and the election itself six weeks away, indications yesterday were that another heated political campaign might obtain in the little suburban town.

Petitions to put the name of Mayor Norman A. Pruitt on the ballot for re-election were being circulated. Floyd B. Mathias, former councilman and opponent of Pruitt in the special election last December, appeared ready to declare himself the rival candidate.

Pruitt's victory last December, by the close vote of 467 to 402, apparently has rankled Mathias. The latter never has congratulated his rival on the victory.

Elections will be held for council seats in each of the town's four wards. There may be a contest in the second ward, where former Councilman John Duever has been campaigning for the last week. The incumbent, Roy T. Fowkes, has not made his intentions known.

Daniel J. Orcutt and Mrs. Elizabeth Laughton have been named election supervisors.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., March 31.—The board of directors of the chamber of commerce here went on record yesterday as opposed to the gross sales tax, favoring instead the 2 per cent sales tax as a means of raising revenue for relief in Maryland.

State Senator Ernest W. Miller, of Washington County, was informed by telegram of the attitude of the chamber board.

A storm of protests has developed here against the gross sales tax and many telegrams were dispatched to Senator Miller during the last few days urging that he favor the 2 per cent sales tax.

Fairfax Women Plan to Attend District Rally

Will Go Thursday to Home Demonstration Session at Charlottesville.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 248, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Clarendon 138-J

A large delegation from the Home Demonstration Clubs of Fairfax County will go to Charlottesville Thursday to attend the Northern Virginia meeting of the Virginia Federation of Home Demonstration Clubs. This is the first rear-district meetings have been held, preceding the annual summer State-wide convention in Blacksburg. Twelve counties, Albemarle, Augusta, Fairfax, Frederick, Greene, Highland, Loudoun, Madison, Orange, Prince William, Rockbridge and Spotsylvania, will participate.

Miss Jessie E. Wallace, State agent, of Blacksburg, will speak in the morning on governmental policies affecting farm women.

A summary of the Virginia federation's aims will be given by the State president, Mrs. Guy Roop, of Snowville. Reports will be made by State committee chairmen as follows: Mrs. C. Nelson Beck, of Albemarle, on legislation; Mrs. T. C. Diehl, of Dinwiddie, on citizenship; Mrs. S. D. Mangus, of Rockbridge, on highway beautification; Mrs. Ben Wailes, of Amherst, on library facilities, and Mrs. Warren Garrett, of Chesterfield, on health. The delegates will be welcomed by Mrs. E. D. Vosbury, of Fairfax County, State corresponding secretary, who will preside in the absence of the district vice president, Mrs. Frank Jones, of Staunton.

In the afternoon Dr. McLedge Moffett, dean of women of East Radford State Teachers' College, will speak on "Ourselves As a Product of Farm Life." A luncheon will be served at noon by the advisory board of Albemarle County. Entertainment will include group singing led by Mrs. R. M. Spencer, of Orange County; a reading by Mrs. Harry Clemons, of University, and a song by Joe Worley, of the University of Virginia. Invocation will be pronounced by Dr. George E. Booker, of First Methodist Church.

Hot lunches are being made available in eight of the Fairfax County schools as a FERA project, according to W. B. Tillinghast, county assistant officer.

Funds are used to employ women in the schools to prepare and serve the lunches. Supplies are provided by the communities through local organizations.

The project, to last throughout this school session, provides free lunches to indigent children, others paying small amounts.

The schools under the plan are Lorton, McLean, Floris, Herndon, Franconia, Groveton, Centerville and Annandale. Tillinghast said there are funds for two other schools to participate.

Mrs. W. W. Louk, Mrs. M. Bauman and Mrs. Will Bennett have been appointed a committee from the Vienna Parent-Teacher Association to attend a meeting of the District H federation of school leagues and P.-T. Associations April 26 in Falls Church.

Mrs. Austin Faulkner, Mrs. Walter Allensworth and Mrs. Hugh Burke have been appointed by Mrs. Thomas R. Moreland as a nominating committee.

agglutination. Sumner and Howell suspected it was not the urease, but some impurity, which acted on the blood. Their search for the impurity led to discovery of the chrystalline hemagglutinin.

This substance is now being tested on animals in the veterinary college at Cornell to find out whether it may be toxic.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31.—Inquiry at the Medical Information Bureau of the New York Academy of Medicine today about the significance of the Cornell discovery of a purified immune body, hemagglutinen of the Jack Bean, brought the statement that it is promising.

"The science of immunity," the statement says, was rooted in empiricism. Jenner used as his laboratory the everday world, and for his experimental material the observations of a dairy maid and his own son.

"In this fashion he achieved the first and greatest of all triumphs in immunity, smallpox vaccination. Pasteur with whom the modern science of immunity may be said to have begun, was more elaborate in his experimental work, but even so, much of what he accomplished was the fruits of empiricism.

"It was the great hope of Robert Kock and more particularly Ehrlich, to substitute rigorously controlled laboratory methods for empiricism in the science of immunology. Their hopes could not be realized to any appreciable extent because of the then existent lag in the sciences of prysics and chemistry, particularly as applied to the living world.

"Since their day, however, organic chemistry and physics have made phenomenal progress so that numerous organic compounds that is, chemical substances definitely associated with living tissues, etc., have been completely analyzed and synthetically, or artificially, reproduced.

"It is therefore to be expected that we will now gain greater insight into the nature of the substances which endow the body with resistance against a variety of diseases. Also, it is not an unwarranted hope that scientists may shortly artificially reproduce some of the immunizing agents.

"It is in the light of this that the announcement from Cornell is particularly promising and interesting."

Health Boards Merger Voted At Cumberland

Coordination of County, City Departments Wins Council Favor.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., March 31.—The mayor and city council yesterday adopted a recommendation of the board of health to coordinate the city and county health departments, under supervision of Dr. Joseph P. Franklin, and later to name an assistant to Dr. Franklin. The action was urged by Dr. W. Allen Freeman, who surveyed the local situation for the State board of health.

Dr. Franklin submitted a letter to the council to show the advantages of coordination, claiming much of the work of the two departments can be simplified, and pointing out various branches already are working together.

Under the arrangement Dr. Franklin does not receive additional salary, but the city will be required to appoint a physician with public health service experience to serve as assistant.

The council awarded $100 from the Sunday motion picture tax fund to the Cumberland head clinic, supervised by Dr. Franklin. The money is to be used to provide glasses for needy school children.

Slash Refused On Relief Wage By Washington

Maryland County Continues Existing Pay Though Others Reduce.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., March 31.—The Washington County Welfare Board will not alter the wage scale of relief workers as has been done in several other Maryland Counties. This is because there are only enough projects to give 30 days work in Washington County.

The reduction of the scale for relief workers from 30 to 20 cents an hour in other sections of Maryland was ordered because it was felt that more work could be accomplished. The workers will be alloted the same amount of relief, but will be required to work more hours weekly to earn it.

The local Welfare Board felt that any change which it might make would only be for 30 days until the new Government prgoram for relief will become effective, when the wage scale will be indicated.

New projects are now being studied so that the local board will be prepared to act immediately upon the launching of the new work relief program.

Danville Relief Work May Last Until August

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., March 31.—Danville will be able to provide enough projects to take care of 1,000 unemployed men and women through July, the city council has been told by local relief agency heads. This is contingent on approval of all pending projects, which include road work, repair work, deepening the channel of Dan River near the city power house and general clean-up work.

In addition, there is the school building program, four highway projects within the city and a bridge repair job. The greatest difficulty, that of finding work for colored women, is expected to be relieved when the community gardens are ready for planting.

Ethiopia Moves For Settlement By Arbitration

Demands League Promptly Appoint Commission to End Dispute.

By the Associated Press.

Geneva, March 31.—Ethiopia has informed the League of Nations that she wants immediate appointment of an arbitration commission to settle her dispute over border battles with Italy, the Journal Des Nations said today.

League officials refused to confirm or deny the paper's statement. (Dispatches from Addis Ababa yesterday said Ethiopia had broken off direct negotiations with Italy over colonial boundary disputes, taking precautions to protect foreigners from possible hostilities and had sent a note to the league).

Italy recently announced she would accept the institution of an arbitration commission after possibilities for direct negotiation had been exhausted. Apparently Italy believed there is still hope of reaching a direct agreement.

The Ethiopian-Italian treaty provides for a commission of conciliation composed of two Ethiopians and two Italians if conciliation fails. A fifth neutral member is to be reported by the commission as it proceeds with arbitration.

Britain Cool to Italy's Dispute in Africa

By the Associated Press.

Rome, March 31.—A distinct cooling of the British attitude toward Italy's activities in East Africa growing out of the Ethiopian controversy, was causing heated discussion in government circles today.

A treaty, it appears, has bobbed up—a treaty signed in 1906 between England, Italy and France guaranteeing the independence of Ethiopia as the only remaining African kingdom.

The moment Italian troops left for Africa, there was a noticeable cooling of the British attitude, according to diplomatic authorities here, and a note of opposition crept into the British press.

Then followed interviews between Sir John Simon, British foreign minister, and Italian Ambassador Dino Grandi, at London, and between Mussolini and Sir Eric Drummond, British Ambassador in Rome.

In diplomatic circles it was said that England, in the course of these conversations, called Italy's attention to the treaty of 1906, and at this point the Giornale D'Italia, authoritative newspaper of Rome, printed a three-column front-page editorial describing the support Italy gave England during Britain's East African campaign from 1902 to 1905.

In Rome the British objections to Italy's going into Abyssinia are summed up as follows:

Since Ethiopia is the last independent African state, an attack against Addis Ababa might produce an anti-white reaction throughout Africa which would also have repercussions in the British African possessions.

In the event of an Italo-Ethiopian war, England would probably have to send troops to the Sudan-Abyssinian frontier.

Protest against the high cost of food, particularly meats, has been voiced by the Woman's Improvement Club of Silver Spring, Md., in a letter sent to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace. Present prices were termed "prohibitive."

The resolutions were sent to the club for action by Mrs. G. A. Chadwick, of Washington Grove, and will be presented at the annual meeting of the Maryland Federation of Women's Clubs in May.

Mrs. H. S. Gfuss, president, has appointed Mrs. Talmadge Miller, Mrs. H. J. Halstrick and Mrs. John J. Dolan to select a slate of officers for the annual election in April.

London Waits Study Of Eden Report

By the Associated Press.

London, March 31.—Anthony Eden's conversations in Moscow constitute a historic milestone in relations between capitalist Britain and Communist Russia, but a careful study of his report will be necessary before the government can tell whether the cause of the peace security system has been materially aided, official quarters said tonight.

It was learned here that the Soviet authorities fairly extended themselves in trying to create a better understanding between the two nations on political and economic matters, and urged that an understanding be established in the Far East as well as in Europe, since Russia wants a Far Eastern peace pact.

While in Warsaw Eden will direct his chief efforts toward trying to bring Poland into an eastern European pact without Germany should Hitler continue his opposition against mutual assistance in that part of Europe after the general conference in Stresa, Italy.

He will also try to learn just how good are Poland's relations with Germany and France in order to enable Britain properly to gauge the situation on that part of the continent.

Talks in Warsaw Start Tomorrow

By the Associated Press.

Warsaw, March 31.—A better understanding of Poland's geographical position—and therefore of her attitude on several vexatious international problems—was listed in authoritative Polish circles tonight as the greatest good that could come from the visit of Capt. Anthony Eden.

The British envoy, arriving tomorrow from Moscow, and Marshal Joseph Pilsudsky, the Polish dictator, will begin their talks on Tuesday.

Poland's geographical position, it was explained, would make clear to the Englishman why this country, situated between heavily armed Russia and heavily armed Germany, opposes, like the latter, an Eastern security pact.

Also it would explain why Poland believes her best security for peace lies in her own army.

Polish newspapers have printed long accounts of Eden's talks in Berlin and Moscow, speculating on the possible significance to Poland of the divergent views. It was declared Eden would be warmly welcomed here.

Pomorze (the Polish corridor) is expected to play a role in the coming conversations. If the question is raised, the prediction is that Polish leaders will simply say that the corridor—Poland's outlet to the sea—is Polish and that Germany is not seriously inconvenienced by the separation of east Prussia from the rest of the Reich by this strip of land.

Several observers expect that the entire Polish case will be rested upon her desire for peace—that Poland does not want any more territory because she has sufficient problems already with the minorities within her boundaries.

Laval Redrafting Security Pact

By the United Press.

Paris, March 31.—Foreign Minister Pierre Laval was reported tonight to be redrafting the proposed eastern European security pact in the belief Germany and Poland both will reject invitations to participate.

He conferred frequently with the Soviet Ambassador, both keeping in touch with the Anglo-Russian conversations in Moscow. The redrafting of the pact was being carried out despite a report widely circulated in Paris that Poland would agree to sign the pact if invited by Great Britain.

Opinion for the moment here is that a solution must be worked out without Poland and Germany. A suggestion that Laval might be invited to stop at Warsaw on the way to Moscow the end of the month was greeted coldly.

3-Power Alliance Seen by League

By the United Press.

Geneva, March 31.—Results of the Anglo-Russian peace conference in Moscow tonight confirmed the belief here that France, Russia and Czechoslovakia shortly will conclude a virtual military alliance, replacing the projected eastern European security pact.

The communique indicates, however, that such a three-power alliance of mutual armed assistance against any aggressor may be left open to Germany and Poland, in order to conform with the League of Nations covenant and satisfy British insistence such a pact must not be directed against any one nation.

Russia, members of the Little Entente—Rumania, Jugoslavia and Czechoslovakia—as well as certain sections of opinion in France are increasingly impatient to conclude the pact. Hence, it may be initialed shortly, possibly before the April 15 special session of the league council to consider France's protest against German rearmament.

The projected alliance would be supported by the Little Entente and Balkan nations generally, it was believed here.

Italy also might be expected to approve Premier Benito Mussolini is completing a new rapprochement with Jugoslavia which would enable Rome to cooperate fully with the anti-German bloc in the new line-up.

The British peace missions to Berlin and Moscow have convinced observers that Poland remains Germany's only friend on the Continent.

Hence, Capt. Anthony Eden's visit to Warsaw tomorrow will be watched closely by all capitals and league officials in an effort to determine the extent of the German-Polish understanding.

Vienna Pessimistic At Parley's Result

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, March 31.—The cordial progress of Russo-British conversations only deepened anxiety in Vienna today, the semiofficial Reichspost expressing fear France, England and Italy may discover too late how dangerous Soviet co-operation can be.

The newspaper supported its pessimistic remarks by a series of quotations from Stalin and Lenin designed to show the Soviet's determination to foster world revolution by pitting capitalist nations against each other.

It said Gen. Erich Ludendorf, of Germany, made a mistake when he smuggled Lenin into Russia during the World War, with the result Russia not only abandoned the allies—which was what Ludendorf wanted—but "the conflagration ignited by Lenin almost consumed Germany too."

Citizens Fight Bill Legalizing Whippet Races

Prince Georges Clerics See Menace to Youth in Measure.

Strong opposition to a bill permitting dog racing in Maryland, which is now pending before the State Legislature, developed yesterday in the metropolitan area of Prince Georges County.

The measure would allow 180 days of racing in the State annually except during the period in which the four major horse tracks are operating.

Clergymen, public officials and other citizens of the county will urge Gov. Harry W. Nice, State Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer and members of the Prince Georges County delegation in the House of Delegates to do everything possible to prevent passage of the bill.

Attached as an amendment to a Washington County measure which had passed through the Senate, the bill came as a surprise Saturday to members of the House, who were unaware of its significance until attention to it was called by Delegate William G. Gassaway, Democrat, of Howard County.

Bill Is Assailed.

Delegate Gassaway assailed the bill bitterly and said members of the Legislature "would have a lot of explaining to do when they returned home for enactment of measures permitting lotteries, claw and other slot machines and now dog racing." The measure passed to third reading, however, by a 62-41 vote.

The proposed legislation has stirred the clergymen and citizens of Mount Rainier, particularly. It is stated they fear if the bill becomes law a dog track might be established by gambling interests at the former La Fontaine establishment near Mount Rainier, known as "Jimmy's Place."

The Rev. Walter P. Plumley, rector of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, of Mount Rainier, said he was especially opposed to dog racing because he feared it might breed gambling among children. He pointed out that such a form of racing was generally frowned upon, one of the principal reasons being that small bets were possible, resulting in many children being attracted.

"Plot" Charged.

The Rev. Mr. Plumley charged the bill had been introduced at the "eleventh hour," allowing no opportunity for it to be studied. He said also that should a track be established in the metropolitan area it would be a harmful influence for students of the University of Maryland and the boys of the Civilian Conservation Camp at Beltsville.

Congregations of churches in Mount Rainier and Brentwood last night adopted resolutions opposing the bill and it is understood the mayor and council of Mount Rainier will take similar action tonight. The resolutions will ask that Prince Georges County be allowed local option through passage of an amendment and will be presented to the Prince Georges delegation at Annapolis today.

Churches adopting the resolutions were St. John's Episcopal, the Christian, Methodist Episcopal South, Lutheran and Baptist, all of Mount Rainier, and the Brentwood M. E. Church South.

Dr. B. P. Robertson, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Hyattsville, and other ministers of that town last night urged citizens of the town to fight the bill.

New Gruver Homes Attract Attention

Model Houses Embody Latest Building Standards.

The new group of homes offered by B. H. Gruver, in select Glover Park, is proving one of the most popular among home showings of the early spring. The are featured by a model home sponsored by The Washington Post, at 2320 Thirty-ninth street northwest, attractively furnished by the Hecht Co.

In these presentations, Mr. Gruver, a veteran builder of popular-priced homes, ambodies high standards of construction and planning. The model home is equipped with modern gas appliances through the cooperation of the Washington Gas Light Co.

The houses to which the exhibit dwelling directs attention are of 20-foot width and all-brick construction. They are noted for their large rooms and luxuriously equipped baths, Johns-Manville rock wool insulation, beautiful finish and many other modern features.

Their location is a high and desirable elevation just ten minutes drive from Dupont Circle. The display house will be open for inspection every day until 9 p. m. The homes may be seen by driving out Massachusetts avenue to Wisconsin avenue, then turning left, or south, to Calvert street; then right on Calvert street to Thirty-ninth street and left two blocks.

Blossom Quest Brings Injuries For 3 in Crash

Tourists Seriously Hurt at Middlebrook While En Route Here.

Six persons, three of them Cherry Blossom tourists bound for Washington, were injured last night on the slippery Frederick Pike in automobile accidents. Several others were injured in Washington and its environs over the week-end.

The tourists were injured when the driver of their car, Dr. Richard Diehl, 36, of Hagerstown, Md., turned out into the middle of the road to avoid striking another car that turned into a roadside stand at Middlebrook, several miles beyond Gaithersburg, Md.

The Diehl car was in a head-on collision with a car operated by A. F. Singstock, 1229 Pennsylvania avenue southeast, who was bound for Frederick, Md. Singstock's leg was broken and he was brought to Georgetown Hospital by the Rockville Resuce Squad.

Those injured in the Diehl car were: Dr. Diehl, scalp injuries; his wife, Mrs. Louise Diehl, 38, head injuries and a fractured left arm, and Miss Madeline Hoover, 36, of Hagerstown, scalp injuries and bruises. All three were said to be in a serious condition at Frederick County Hospital.

Jesse Chaney, colored, of Clarksburg, Md., suffered a broken leg when he walked into the path of a motorcycle operated by Russell Shaw, 2114 Eighteenth street northwest, who was returning to Washington from a visit to his home in Hagerstown, near Clargsburg.

Chaney was taken to the Montgomery County General Hospital by the Hyattstown Fire Rescue Squad. Shaw was bruised and cut, but was able to resume his journey to Washington.

Mrs. Bertha Kline, 28, of Capitol Heights, Md., was seriously injured last night in an automobile accident on Central avenue, near Largo, when the machine in which she was riding struck a telephone pole.

She was reported in an undetermined condition late last night. She was suffering from a possible skull fracture and multiple lacerations.

Prince Georges County police were searching for a man who was reported to have been driving the car. Officer Albert Anderson was in charge of the investigation. The Bladensburg Rescue Squad brought the woman to Casualty Hospital.

Expectant Mother's Beheading Depends on Hitler's Decision

Reprieve for Woman Who Let Children Starve Is Problem.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 31.—Whether the head of an expectant mother shall be placed upon the Nazi chopping block is a question Adolf Hitler must decide.

Frau Charlotte Juenemann, 24-year-old woman who was convicted of the murder of three of her children yesterday because she spent dole money for night life and left them to starve, expects another child.

She was in the women's prison in northern Berlin today, with the date for execution of the sentence uncertain.

It has not been customary in Germany to execute expectant mothers, and it is up to Hitler whether the law takes its course.

New Nazi conceptions of the desirability of allowing a possibly "tainted" offspring to live may play a decisive part in the case. The callousness of the crime has excited popular feeling to such a pitch that it is believed unlikely a reprieve will be granted.

Frau Juenemann at her trial told how she abandoned her three children in a cold basement apartment and went to live with a cafe violinist. Her husband is in an insane asylum.

She spent her dole money upon fast living, investigators testified. When she went to their hovel she threw potatoes into the room and hurried away in order not to hear the children's cries.

374 Infant Couples Wed at Mass Rites

By the Associated Press.

Bombay, India, March 31.—Their childish eyes bewildered and their bare feet fretfully chafing the grass, 374 infant couples were married today in a meadow near the small village of Kathiawar.

It was the largest mass child marriage ceremony held in India in many years. Some of the brides and bridegrooms were mere infants in arms.

Many of the babies, too small to walk, slept in the arms of their elders while the latter said their "I do's" for them.

The children ordinarily continue to live with their parents through the period of adolescence, when they set up housekeeping on their own. Although in recent years the Indian Legislature has enacted laws forbidding marriage for boys under 14 and girls under 10, these are considered unenforceable in many cases.

Chaco Armies Mark 3 Years Of War June 15

200-Mile Front Awaits New Peace Move Backed by the League.

By the Associated Press.

Buenos Aires, March 31.—Weary Paraguayan and Bolivan armies today faced each other along a 200-mile front in the Chaco after a month of indecisive skirmishing, with indications that fighting would be prolonged until one nation or the other should collapse.

Unless the new peace effort launched by Argentina and Chile with the blessing of the League of Nations succeeds, the bitter, bloody war over the disputed Chaco will round out its third year June 15.

Optimism has been voiced both at Asuncion and La Paz concerning the Argentine-Chilean effort, though neither the belligerents nor the mediators have cited concrete reasons for hoping this peace attempt will succeed where 18 earlier neutral efforts have failed.

Bolivia, on whose territory the last stages of the war are being fought, has accepted the general plan for guarantees and an armistice to be underwritten by neutral American powers. Paraguay has indicated its assent in principle to the project.

Bolivia is threatened with invasion of her eastern provinces, Paraguay with destruction of her army if Bolivia is able to strike an effective blow. Both the under-populated countries have lost thousands of men since isolated patrols clashed June 15, 1932, to send them at each other's throats. Their economic systems slowly are cracking, and casualties are sapping their male population.

Each belligerent contends the other has lost 50,000 men. British observers have commented that in proportion to the number of men engaged, deaths have exceeded the casualty rate in the World War.

Elections Tomorrow Test Wisconsin Progressives

Madison, Wis., March 31 (AP).—An off-season test of strength for the new Progressive Party, which came into power in Wisconsin after its first political venture last fall, will be provided in the spring elections Tuesday, when three State legislative seats, vacated since the November election, will be filled.

In addition to selecting two new State senators and one assemblyman, the voters will elect a justice of the State Supreme Court and five circuit judges.

Ex-Rumanian Officials Urge Anti-Jewish Laws

Bucharest, Rumania, March 31 (AP).—A violently worded anti-Semitic manifesto was issued today by 11 former cabinet ministers of Rumania advocating the introduction of racial perfection measures in all forms of Rumanian activity.

The manifesto came in the wake of a clash last night between Jewish students and ultra-nationalist undergraduates of the university who raided a Jewish ball, smashed windows and roughly handled the dancers.

China Buying Old Tires.

Shanghai, China, March 31 (AP).—The Chinese market is beginning to absorb immense quantities of old worn-out automobile tires bought up in the United States. One steamship recently brought 100 pressed bundles of old tires, averaging 20 to each bundle. These are largely used as soles for sandals worn by coolies and peasants.

Bayonets in Evidence At Hungary Election

Budapest, Hungary, March 31 (AP).—Bayonets and charges of bribes and free wines colored a lively parliamentary election today in which Premier Julius Goemboes won an even more sweeping victory than his friends had predicted. Returns from 133 out of 184 districts gave the Unity (government) Party 105 parliamentary mandates.

Opposition spokesmen complained gendarmes freely used their bayonets in many villages to prevent antigovernment votes and at other places bribed with cash and free wine.

Strike Threatens Tieup Of Mexican Transport

Mexico City, March 31 (AP).—Declaration of a general strike in Tampico, the walkout of 5,000 trolley operators in the capital and the threat of a general sympathy strike that would tie up all the country's transportation facilities complicated a serious labor problem in Mexico today.

Employers, especially in foreign companies, are closely watching the development of the strike movement in an effort to ascertain how far the present wave of radical sentiment will carry the country.

Hamilton, Pal Thought In 'Badlands' Hideout

Memphis, Tenn., March 31. (AP).—Belief that Raymond Hamilton, the Southwest's most notorious gunman, had found refuge in the "Badlands" along the Oklahoma-Arkansas border was expressed today by Federal and police officers as they renewed their search for the desperado and a wounded confederate.

Hamilton, it was generally decided, left a cold trail when he and his companion sped out of Memphis Friday after dumping two hostages here. The chase started after robbery of a bank at Prentiss, Miss., of $1,100.

Mrs. Rockefeller to Exhibit American Folk Art Collection

By the Associated Press.

Williamsburg, Va., March 31.—The Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, jr., collection of American folk art, one of the most important of its kind, will be placed on public exhibition starting tomorrow in the Ludwell-Paradise House.

There are paintings and pottery, sculpture and whittlings, weather vanes and cigar store Indians; and all are the expression not of professional artists, but of craftsmen and tradesmen of early America.

"Most of the makers of this art," said Holger Cahill, of New York, who arranged the exhibit, "had little school training, but all knew how to co-ordinate the activity of the hand and eye. They had the art of making things with their hands.

"The work differs from European folk art in that it has been produced not by peasants immemorially attached to the soil, but by craftsmen and amateurs from every walk of life. It is noteworthy for its freshness, its homespun vigor and its indigenous American quality."

The painting division of the Rockefeller collection includes a group of oils consisting of portraits of the limner and sign painter types, pastels, water colors and paintings on velvet by young ladies in boarding schools of the early nineteenth century.

Lerroux Loses Move To Form New Cabinet

Madrid, March 31 (AP).—Obstacles increased today for Alejandro Lerroux, veteran leader asked by President Niceto Alcala Zamora to form another cabinet to succeed the one headed by him, which resigned Friday.

Liberal Democrats refused to join a proposed coalition government, virtually wrecking Lerroux's plans as two of his minority parties have deserted him.

Revised Scoring At Bridge Begun

Due to Help Culbertsons Safeguard Lead.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31.—The new contract bridge scoring rules which drastically reduce vulnerable penalties and grand slam premiums went into effect today throughout the world.

The rules were adopted under an agreement by the New York Whist Club, the Portland Club of London and the French Bridge Commission.

With the second week of the Culbertson-Sims 150-rubber match due to start tomorrow, bridge experts predicted the scoring changes will have an important effect on the result.

Trailing by 9,880 points, experts hold that Mr. and Mrs. Hal Sims will find it more difficult to reduce the gap because of the reduced grand slam bonus and vulnerable penalties.

Police Widen Search For McKim Hollins

San Francisco, March 31 (AP).—Attempts to locate McKim Hollins, wealthy brother of Miss Marion Hollins, noted golfer, were widened by police here today after initial efforts had produced no clews to his disappearance here 11 days ago. Police were notified last night of the disappearance at the request of Miss Hollins.

Hollins, 43, is a Harvard graduate, a former member of the New York Stock Exchange and is widely known in Pacific Coast and Eastern society circles.

Johnson Signs Off Air For Visit to Washington

Chicago, March 31 (AP).—Gen. Hugh Johnson, hors de combat after a final vitriolic thrust against Father Coughlin and Huey Long, abandoned the radio wars today and departed for Washington with his secretary, Miss Frances Robinson. He had proclaimed Saturday night's radio half hour his last salvo in the three-cornered word war.

Voicing his belief that his previous speeches had silenced the Louisiana Senator, Gen. Johnson focused his attack on the Detroit priest, branding him an "American Hitler" and defending the former NRA chief's own record as general and attorney.

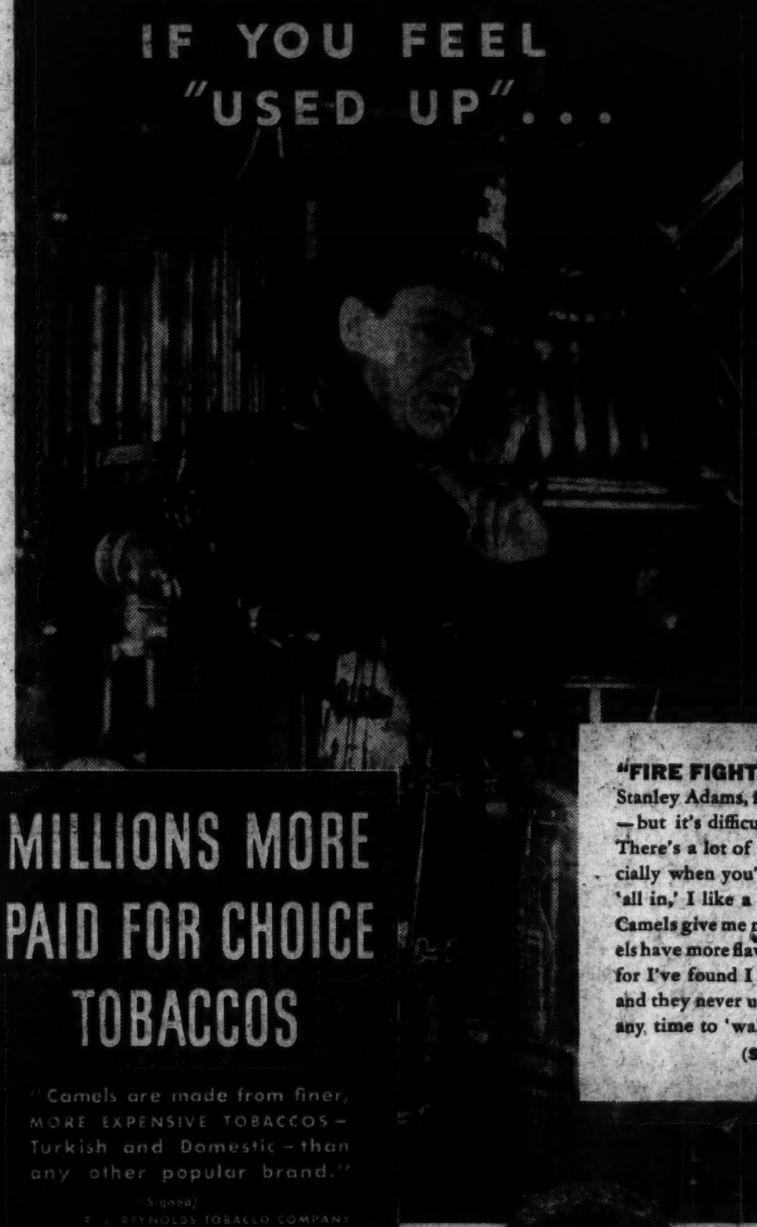
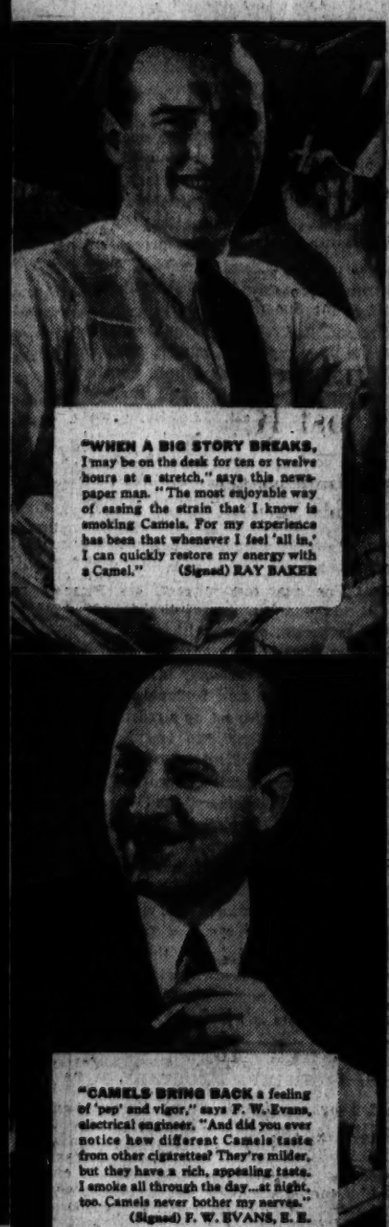
IF YOU FEEL "USED UP"... GET A LIFT WITH A CAMEL!





"WHEN A BIG STORY BREAKS, I may be on the desk for ten or twelve hours at a stretch," says this newspaper man. "The most enjoyable way of easing the strain that I know is smoking Camels. For my experience has been that whenever I feel 'all in,' I can quickly restore my energy with a Camel." (Signed) RAY BAKER

"FIRE FIGHTING IS MY JOB," says Stanley Adams, fireman. "It's exciting, yes—but it's difficult, exhausting work, too. There's a lot of pleasure in a Camel, especially when you're tired out. When I feel 'all in,' I like a Camel to freshen me up. Camels give me new 'pep' and energy. Camels have more flavor—and yet they're mild, for I've found I can smoke them steadily and they never upset my nerves. I'm ready any time to 'walk a mile for a Camel'!" (Signed) STANLEY ADAMS

"CAMELS BRING BACK a feeling of 'pep' and vigor," says F. W. Evans, electrical engineer. "And did you ever notice how different Camels taste from other cigarettes? They're milder, but they have a rich, appealing taste. I smoke all through the day...at night, too. Camels never bother my nerves." (Signed) F. W. EVANS, E. E.

That feeling of alertness, which is so necessary to good work, comes back. And boy! do Camels taste good!" (Signed) JOHN L. FILSON, '36

"A WOMAN'S DAY is never done," says Mrs. Ross Kelley. "Running a home involves details that use up energy. When things begin to irritate me, I know that it's time to smoke a Camel. Soon I have renewed energy and can go on to the next task. Camels have such a mild flavor, I've become quite a steady smoker." (Signed) MRS. ROSS KELLEY

Happy-Go-Lucky.

"One can't be a happy-go-lucky housekeeper in the White House," Mrs. Roosevelt is quoted as saying in a recent commercial broadcast. "There's always the weight of responsibility which goes with handling anything which doesn't belong to you—which belongs to the people of the United States."

It is pleasant to hear that this high sense of responsibility is felt for the doilies and spoons and curtains of the Executive Mansion. Perhaps, before another two years are up, it will be extended from White House furnishings to the larger national heritage, or what remains thereof.

If the Administration yearns to indulge in breakage, the interests of the American people would best be served by having more of it confined to the White House kitchen, less of it emanating from the executive offices.

Rewards Of Nonsense.

Front pages have blazoned the news of how Dame Fortune smiled on a handful of predominantly non-Hibernian Americans who had contributed, probably illegally and unquestionably illogically, to the support of hospitals in Ireland. By "donating" a certain sum they became eligible to share in a sweepstakes, being designated as winners by a steeplechase held in an otherwise unheard of suburb of Liverpool, England.

But there is another side to the picture. The great majority knew nothing of the horses (let alone ever having seen a hunter or a race) and their concern for Irish health was at best a secondary consideration. A considerable number have now learned that their "donations" were collected by racketeers misrepresenting themselves as agents, and rumors of tampering with the favorite have been put into circulation.

The reason that editors throughout the country ordered such prominent display for this hodge-podge of gambling, charity and sport lies in the breath-taking sums of money involved. In all, $2,664,000 was paid to American participants. To logical minds, such gratuitous publicity of the rewards of nonsense is, to say the least, irritating. They read of efforts to legalize similar lotteries in this country. They hear from Florida that 2,000,000 persons bet $35,000,000 in the horse and dog parimutuels. They fear a collapse of all economic morals under stress of the depression, and in partial accord with other prevailing policies. And with good reason.

The winners are variously quoted as planning "to save the new fortune as nest egg for my old age," "to set up a trust fund for my son's education," "to buy a new dairy truck for my husband," "to go back to Italy and live on a farm," "to go into the wholesale vegetable business" and so on. No report is made, for obvious reasons, of the comments of the hundreds of thousands who tossed their worthless tickets into the wastebasket. For each one of this unchronicled legion has sustained a monetary loss and so is further removed from the possibility of ever indulging in the sundry pleasures and luxuries contemplated by the extremely limited number of "donors" whose good fortune is being publicized.

Dr. Ruhland's Program.

Nothing but applause is due Commissioner Allen for his vision in conceiving the plan for an up-to-date medical center for the District. He proposes to construct a self-liquidating $5,000,000 hospital with PWA funds, the chief aim being to place hospitalization within the reach of people of moderate means "on whom the burden of medical care now falls." In addition to coordinating the present hospitals of the city, the center would include medical, nursing and social service schools as well as facilities for dental treatment.

Desirable as the proposal may be, however, it would be unfortunate if it should divert attention from the supplementary appropriation now sought by Dr. Ruhland for expansion of the Public Health Department. The new health officer is asking for $93,400 to broaden the scope of his office in the fields of public health nursing, school medical examination and tuberculosis control. In regard to the last, it has been demonstrated that existing circumstances make it impossible to hospitalize many persons now menacing the community as carriers of the disease. The urgency of the need for more adequate protection of health in the schools is self-evident to all who have the slightest acquaintance with the prevailing situation.

It appears that the first duty of the District Commissioners is to promote, to the full extent of their influence, the more modest health program outlined by Dr. Ruhland.

Revision Of The NRA.

The original decision of the Administration to let Congress write its own bill for revising the NRA appeared from the beginning a dubious method of procedure. However, the practice of presenting a blank check for congressional signature has been much resented of late, and it no doubt appeared to be wiser political strategy to withhold positive recommendations. Legislative procrastination has now forced a change of policy, since the date upon which the recovery act expires is rapidly approaching. A bill providing for a two-year extension of the NRA, and carrying the indorsement of the Administration has, therefore, been introduced by Senator Harrison and referred to the Finance Committee, of which he is chairman.

Still mindful of the necessity of propitiating congressional critics of the NRA, this bill is offered as a mere "basis for discussion," with the implication that extensive modifications will not be resisted. In general, it follows the recommendations already outlined by Donald Richberg in his recent testimony before the Senate Finance Committee.

Although endeavoring to disarm critics who charge that the NRA fosters monopoly, permits price-fixing and production control, and constitutes an unlawful invasion of the field of intrastate commerce, the Administration plan contemplates a continuance of the NRA in substantially its present form. Moreover, in trying to clarify certain obscurities of the present law, it tends to increase rather than to curtail the extent of control which may be exercised over industry.

Although, in the future, general codes would be confined to those industries engaged in or affecting interstate commerce, the definition of interstate commerce is made extremely broad. As a result, a great deal of latitude would be given to the Administration to determine whether certain service industries and industries ordinarily regarded as intrastate in character should be brought under the NRA. Similarly, positive declarations against price-fixing and monopolistic practices are subject to the important reservation that price-fixing and production control may be permitted under codes to protect small industries and prevent unfair competition. Thus, professed solicitude for maintenance of the antitrust laws in unamended form can not be taken entirely at face value.

Various controversial labor questions that will ultimately have to be decided have been side-stepped by a recommendation that section 7(a) of the present recovery act be retained in its present form. The President, however, would be authorized to impose limited codes, regulating wages and hours, upon those industries which are known to be exploiting labor. Employes could also seek to establish claims for damages through governmental agencies, in case wage and hour regulations are violated. On the other hand, no provision is incorporated in the bill for labor representation on code authorities, nor is any definite recommendation made as to the length of the working week under codes that might be prescribed by the President.

While the phrasing of the Administration measure is often vague and subject to varying interpretations, it is not, as Senator Borah asserts, "a confused, incoherent and contradictory bill." Unprejudiced reading of the text leads to the conclusion that the generalities, reservations and evasions are designed to avoid the danger of hard and fast legislative definitions that would destroy the flexibility of the administrative organization and close the door to discretionary action, without which the NRA would be unworkable.

In any case, the Administration bill provides a basis for a constructive revision of the present law which is much needed. The sharpshooting senatorial critics apparently have no orderly campaign of action, being content merely to harass NRA officials. Under the circumstances, the Administration has been virtually forced to abandon its "hands off" attitude and challenge Congress to accept its proposals or suggest a better plan.

Behind The I. C. C. Decision.

Although the Interstate Commerce Commission has denied the application of the railroads for a 10 per cent general increase in freight rates, it has authorized certain advances which may add about $85,000,000 to their annual receipts. That sum is a restricted percentage of the additions to operating costs due to restoration of basic rates of pay for railway labor and rising costs of materials, estimated by the roads to amount to nearly $300,000,000 per annum. If the Supreme Court should uphold the constitutionality of the railroad retirement act, further increases in operating outlays would result.

The I. C. C. is fully aware of the seriousness of the railroads' financial position. Enlarged expenditures caused net operating returns to decline in 1934, despite improvement in the volume of traffic. Refusal to approve the rates specifically requested was due to a belief that limited increases might be more productive of revenue under existing conditions.

There is no question whatever concerning the imperative need of the railroads for more revenue. The immediate problem, the decision states, "is not one of profit for railroad owners, but is rather one of enhancing railroad earnings sufficiently to cover their rising operating expenses and taxes, and particularly to enable them to maintain their plant in a condition to enable them to handle a volume of traffic which has been increasing somewhat with business recovery."

In addition to its responsibility for placing the railroads upon a financial basis that will enable them to operate efficiently, the Government owes a duty to a great army of investors, many of them old people, widows and children, whose savings are invested directly or indirectly in the railroads of the country. The majority opinion of the I. C. C. clearly recognizes this larger obligation by emphasizing the necessity of a fair deal for the roads.

Prosperity for the railroads, it is said, calls for regulation of water and motor carriers, so that there will be a unified system of Federal control over these competing transportation agencies. With unfair competition eliminated, the railroads could be expected to make some progress by improving and cheapening the costs of their services, instead of depending upon the doubtful and inadequate expedient of rate increases.

This latest decision of the I. C. C. is a frank and vigorous recognition of the moral responsibility which rests upon the Government to enact legislation that will enable the railroads to help themselves and thereby restore and preserve the value of the vast investment which they represent.

Water On Both Shoulders.

It is rather curious to hear Secretary Wallace denounce the isolationists and demand larger foreign markets for agricultural products while the AAA is sponsoring a program which makes the exportation of farm commodities ever more difficult. The seriousness of our declining foreign market for cotton and other staples can not be denied. But why should Mr. Wallace complain about the ineffectiveness of the reciprocal trade policy when his own organization is so busily engaged in widening the price margin between competitive American and foreign crops?

The AAA policy has brought about a serious shrinkage in our agricultural exports. Prices can not be artificially raised in this country without increasing the advantages of competitors in other lands. Certainly the effects of acreage curtailment, drought and commodity loans are now sufficiently plain to warrant a careful re-examination of the basic theory out of which the AAA developed. But there seems to be very little disposition to consider this aspect of the farm experiment. Rather, the AAA is requesting still greater powers to control and restrict the output of American farms.

For the most part the AAA has thus far depended upon voluntary co-operation to carry out its policy. It has discovered, however, that some farmers are not inclined to cooperate. Officials are seeking definite authority, therefore, to force the recalcitrants into line. Under the amendments now before Congress the AAA could license all handlers of agricultural commodities and those who deal in goods that compete with such commodities. Ordinarily marketing agreements supported by licenses would be entered into on consent of a majority of the processors and distributors. But under special circumstances the Secretary of Agriculture might prescribe the terms on which processors could conduct their business regardless of objections from a majority.

Administrator Davis vigorously defends these amendments by saying that the Secretary could not "exercise arbitrary power over groups of farmers against their will." But he makes no such claim with respect to the enormous section of American business and industry which is engaged in handling farm products. Under the language of this proposed legislation it appears that the AAA would be able to control every market for farm products and thus indirectly tell farmers what they might sell and the price they would be entitled to receive for it.

In some respects this broad "reserve authority" would be limited by the bill reported out last week by the House Agricultural Committee. But that group would greatly extend the powers of the AAA in other directions. It would set aside 30 per cent of all customs duties, and other funds, estimated at $100,000,000, to subsidize agricultural exports, and extend other benefits to farmers. This gives a rather farcical twist to the campaign for more export markets, for official dumping is the most certain means of encouraging foreign governments to erect new barriers against the products of our farms.

A radio artist says he keeps the wolf from the door by crooning. This seems to be a case which the S. P. C. A. should handle.

If food keeps going up a lot of us will have to stop putting it down.

A Patriotic Memorial Highway.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Congressman Haines' bill for a memorial highway linking three national shrines, Mount Vernon, the Lincoln Memorial in Washington and the Gettysburg Battlefield, has been approved by the House Road subcommittee, and should have a fair prospect of passage. The proposed boulevard would be about 75 miles long and would cost between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000.

In normal times the question of the cost of such a project would be considered an obstacle to its passage, but in these days, when money is being handed out so lavishly for emergency purposes, that argument can hardly be convincing. It would come under the head of constructive expenditures and would furnish employment to many idle men. One of the arguments in its favor is that it would be a continuation of the existing highway between Mount Vernon and the City of Washington. That it would be welcomed in Pennsylvania is not to be doubted. The taxpayers of this State are paying their full share—and more—for many dubious experiments, and there is no good reason why they should not benefit by some improvements of a permanent nature.

"Dangers of Free Speech."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was much pleased with your editorial of March 25, "Dangers of Free Speech." There seems to be still a large number of shallow thinkers who do not comprehend that it is the causes of social discontent and unrest that need to be dealt with rather than the discontent itself. They are like incompetent physicians who treat symptoms instead of the causes of sicknesses.

Much more of such expression of reason as that in the editorial referred to is greatly needed just at this time, when there is so much organized pressure from predatory interests and their paid or herded supporters to make more drastic laws to deprive us of the freedom of utterance which was supposed to be guaranteed to us for all time by the Constitution.

May I commend The Post also for its fairness in publishing series of articles on both sides of the present controversy between the Government of Mexico and the Roman Catholic Church? These articles should go far toward helping readers to a real understanding of the causes underlying the conflict.

Lynching Fallacy.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In his letter regarding the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill, which was published in The Post of March 28, Mr. Simpson advances as an excuse for lynching the old fallacy that these crimes have their origin in the righteous indignation of reputable citizens at the slow processes of the law or miscarriage of justice. However, the facts indicate that lynch mobs do not uphold, but violate the law, justice and civilization.

Murder by a mob is still murder, but its effects are more terrible because the active participation of many people debauches entire communities. The lynch mob solves no problems of personal, social or economic maladjustment, but institutes a reign of terror and lawlessness and sets an example of impunity for the brutal and degenerate.

Mr. Simpson's citation of the ineffectiveness of the prohibition amendment is hardly sound. Carried to its logical conclusion, such an argument would advocate the scrapping of all attempts of organized government to control the individual. Since there are some of low intelligence, we should abandon popular education; since we still have thieves, larceny laws should be stricken from the books; since murders do occur, we should not interfere with the "right" of the individual to settle personal differences by the destruction of his opponent.

Many States have not acted to prevent the recurrence of lynching, so it devolves upon the Federal Government to enforce the amendment to the Constitution which guarantees to all citizens the equal protection of the law.

"Where Is The Oracle?"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to commend you upon your recent excellent editorial, "Dangers" of Free Speech! You state well that Mr. Roper might go further in his researches to find out the underlying causes that give rise, in Mr. Roper's opinion, to demogoguery and to the peddling of "false and unverified statements."

Mr. Roper might well ask himself what individual institution or organization constitutes the one and only American Delphic Oracle?

We suffer not from an overdose of freedom of speech but from the waste of time and space given to nonessentials and sensationalism, on the one hand, and from the sowing of good seed on as yet barren soil, on the other hand. That is my opinion and in addition I do not believe that America has a really "free" press or a "free" radio expression.

"Why Go Afield?"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With regard to your article in The Post of March 24, headed "News Flashes," anent the Harlem race riots, why go so far afield about the joblessness and other factors contributing to the riot there?

How about the filthy alley dwellings of poor Negroes here in the District? How about the thousands on relief here, because jobs are denied them? How about the high rate of tuberculosis here in the Nation's Capital?

The press can do a lot to remedy these conditions by continually sponsoring equality for all citizens, but will it? Let's clean out the cellars and garrets of the refuse and rubbish of oppression and racial antagonism lest we awaken to discover that spontaneous cumbustion has caused a conflagration never to be forgotten.

"A Positive Republican Program"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is pleasant to observe your editorial page again acknowledging the existence of the Republican Party. So deeply have you torn your shirt in support of the New Deal during the last two years that it comes as a breath of spring to find you conceding, however reluctantly, even a potential field for "a positive Republican program."

You insist that mere criticism of the New Deal is not constructive—that positive policies are the need of the hour. Permit this faithful reader to suggest that the liquidation of the New Deal presents the most gigantic problem before the Nation today.

After these two years America is utterly paralyzed, economically and spiritually, by the internal confusions and centrifugal combustions within the administrative alphabet.

We are hopelessly entangled in ten balls of Utopian yarn.

The promise to sweep away this wreckage, thus to release once more the immeasurable normal forces of recovery, is the most constructive ideal before the American people today. It is the one living hope in a land of broken dreams.

We should not forget that the battle against the depression was won in 1932. Mr. Roosevelt's known predilection toward gold abandonment and managed currency precipitated the banking panic of February-March, 1933. Since that time every impulse to recovery has been frustrated by the buoyant illusions and executive incompetence of the National Administration.

Once the New Deal is erased the second constructive step will be to reestablish the policies for which Henbert Hoover and the Republican Party fought in 1932: (1) immediate convertible currency of fixed gold content, and (2) an honestly balanced Federal budget. Until these steps are taken, sustained recovery can not even begin.

Nor may we, before these elemental conditions of rehabilitation are established, turn to the secondary issues of social and economic progress. America does want some new hardwood floors in her house, but not before the levees are plugged and the water is pumped from the basement.

Ultimately—no man yet can say when—we shall begin by checking throughout the world the economic creeping paralysis which is rooted in competitive currencies. In his Lincoln Day address at New York in 1933 President Hoover thus presented the issue:

> I do not underestimate the difficulties nor the vast fiscal and financial problems which lie behind the restoration of stability and economic peace. Bold action alone can succeed. The alternative to such constructive action is a condition too grave to be contemplated in passive acceptance.

And that startling prophecy was uttered barely two years ago!

If this is not "a positive Republican program," it at least offers a reasonable starting point for the discussions.

Debunking The Windy City Myth.

The latest piece of debunking to come our way is that which is designed to disengage Chicago from its long-established moniker, the Windy City. According to figures compiled by so disinterested a party as a public librarian, no fewer than 19 large cities are windier than Chicago, including St. Louis, Kansas City, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Minneapolis and Buffalo. The last-named is the windiest of all, with 97 days last year when the wind got up and did its stuff at 32 miles an hour or better. During the same 365 days, Chicago experienced only six occasions on which that velocity was reached.

These disclosures have aroused Buffalo, which points out that its weather station is atop a 16-story building facing Lake Erie, whereas Chicago's station has been lowered to a paltry 131 feet. Our counsel to Buffalo is to keep its shirt on. Are we getting hot and bothered because the figures show St. Louis to be windier than Chicago? Not for a minute! Thanks to the way the lake wind bears down on strangers who chance along Michigan avenue, the country knows Chicago as the Windy City, and that is all there is to it. Any red-haired boy can tell Chicago how much chance it has to shake its nickname

"Luncheon Is Served"

Post Office, Monday.

SEVERAL tragedies occurred at Berlin last week, when Herr Hitler and Baron von Neurath conferred there with Sir John Simon and Capt. Anthony Eden on matters of desperate import to the German Reich—not to mention the general concord of Europe. Over some of those tragedies too much fuss was made by the news agencies and the special correspondents. About one of them, however, certainly too little was cabled—as any Washington hostess will testify.

* * * *

Even the veteran Frederick T. Birchall, telegraphing to the New York Times, dismissed that drama thus curtly:

"Baron von Neurath had invited the British guests to luncheon at his villa in the foreign office grounds. When the luncheon hour arrived the discussion was at its height. At Herr Hitler's suggestion the luncheon was canceled and the conferees shared his own noonday meal in the Chancellery."

* * * *

What did all those war-inhibited men at the conference care about the woman involved in their heroic decision? Nothing. Nothing at all. Most of them probably didn't even remember her existence.

Why even Mr. Birchall—chivalrous as he is known to be in the ordinary amenities of life—didn't speak of her. He cables admiringly under the Atlantic about the "sacrifice" that the conferees made to "duty;" but concerning the victim they really sacrificed—never a word. He spends the Times' money in cable tolls, to catalogue the Hitlers and Simonses, the Goerings, Schachts, Edens and the Baron von Neurath. Yet the last-named's waiting wife, the Baronin von Neurath, their expectant and disappointed hostess—her Mr. Birchall fails even to mention.

* * * *

"Backward, turn backward,
O Time in your flight!"

Back to last Monday.

And then stroll through the Berlin foreign office grounds, force the door of the quivering Von Neurath villa, tiptoe into the breathless Von Neurath dining room.

"They're—why, they're appallingly late! I think these flowers had better go here, where they were before, after all . . . And tell Ludwig the fish had better be moved to the back of the oven.

Depression Psychosis Argues for Lotteries

Father Knickerbocker Looks At Irish Sweepstakes And Questions Wisdom Of Scruples.

By Ralph E. Renaud.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

New York.

THERE is little doubt that this section of the country is becoming increasingly lottery conscious. When Mrs. Oliver Harriman can appear before the New York Legislature and urge the legalization of lotteries on the same day all the newspapers burst into blossom with orchids to pin on the fortunate winners in the Irish Sweepstakes it shows whither the wind is blowing.

It is a psychosis, of course. The last five years have broken down a lot of convictions which were formerly accepted without question. People have been told so often by other (and important) people, who ought to know better, that thrift is no longer a virtue that they have really begun to believe it. Young lads out of college, aching to prove that merit will be rewarded, find that jobs don't come their way. Old people, who have saved all their lives for the proverbial rainy day, see their savings melting under the downpour. An acceptance spreads that life itself is more of a lottery than ever. The sense of a settled security has evaporated. The white collar class patches its trousers only to receive another kick in the rompers. Why not take a chance on a long shot? A miracle might happen.

The result is this mad rush for the Irish sweepstakes. It is the gamble of the lower middle class, because it takes dollars, just as the numbers game is the gamble of the poor, because it takes pennies. And, to the horror of the moralists, miracles do happen with persuasive regularity.

Some one has said that most men lead lives of quiet desperation. When Mr. John Q. Citizen, wondering how much longer he can keep mommer and the girls off the relief rolls, reads in his favorite journal that an undertaker in Brooklyn has won $38,728, he doesn't know whether to crawl into one of the happy mortician's caskets and have it over with then and there, or to rush out with the money he has saved for Nellie's shoes and grab the nearest horse ticket. It is a fairly safe bet, though, that little Nell will continue to wear the old kicks.

• • • •

EVERY year the winners in this huge lottery, which draws millions from the United States, despite our futile laws against it, run pretty true to form. They are almost invariably members of the hard-pushed lower middle class. This year's big winners, for example, were the undertaker, already mentioned, a cashier in a tea room, an elevator operator in a downtown office building and the proprietor of a bakery. Other participants in the big money were a retired laundry proprietor, a working silversmith, a salesman in a furniture house, one of the partners of a grocery, and a widow living on her late husband's insurance. This woman really framed the philosophy of all the rest when she said: "I really couldn't afford the ticket, but I've lost many a two and one-half, so I figured I might as well take a chance on my last."

How the craze for swepstakes' chances centers around New York may be seen from the figures for the country at large. This area has about one-sixteenth of the country's population, but more than half the successful ticket holders live here. There were 277 American winners and 155 hail from this town or hereabouts The sweepstakes this year collected $14,124,000, of which more than $8,000,000 was turned back in prizes distributed in 14 different countries. Tickets on the winning horse paid $143.475.

Taxpayers, who would never dream of investing in tickets, are beginning to wonder if some of this golden deluge couldn't be diverted their way. People gamble whether there are laws against it or not, just as they drank despite prohibition. Irish hospitals are doing quite well, thank you, because of the sweepstakes. But many American hospitals don't know which way to turn to keep their doors open.

THOSE who have been following the career of Mike Romanoff, least-likely-to-succeed candidate for the throne of Russia, in these columns, will be pained to learn that Mike hasn't a place to lay his uncrowned head. He came home the other night, or the other morning, and found his hotel door locked against him. To be sure he hadn't paid his bill but that was a perfectly silly reason for locking the door because not paying bills is merely one of Mike's personal idiosyncracies.

Then, just because he beat on his own door with his heavy squires walking stick and woke up the whole hotel, a couple of dicks popped him on the jaw and laid him in the cooler. What a predicament for the heir to all the Russias!—or even for Harry Gerguson, which is Mike's name when he isn't working somebody.

Mike has added a lot of gayety to this town but it begins to look as though his New York welcome is wearing out. So is Mike.

SIR Arthur Conan Doyle, creator of Sherlock Holmes, Roald Amundsen, discoverer of the South Pole, and Wilbur Wright, first to fly a heavier than air machine, all had a chat together the other night in a darkened airplane flying over Newark. The fact that they are all dead didn't seem to bother them or the other occupants of the plane. Indeed, weather conditions proved excellent for the great wraiths. Their little gathering appears to have created the first haunted aeroplane.

To be sure, the spirit voices, which came through a three-section aluminum trumpet, ounded somewhat like the voice of the medium, Miss Maina Tate, but the 13 eager listeners were sure they were authentic, especially that of Conan Doyle, who is said to have suggested the flight 12 years ago. If the trip proves anything, it seems to be that all God's chillun got wings, especially in the after-life.

Domestic servants are getting their say-so at the Woman's City Club, where a series of meetings between housewives and their employes have been arranged to clarify the problems of the average menage.

A cook, apparently committed to the theory of technocracy, complained of the "rushing tempo" of housework. "Those engaged in my type of work," she said, "live like slaves and work like machines." As a matter of fact, a good deal of the work around the kitchen is now done by machines, electrical and otherwise. These machines, incidentally, do not seem to have produced the unemployment among domestic servants that they have in the factories. An egg-beater is a long step ahead of a spoon, but it never caused a cook's dismissal. Neither did an electric ice box, which also helps out employment at the power-house.

The chief complaint of the domestic workers seemed to be that they never get a full day off. Organization and written contracts, they thought, might cure that.

What is the proper etiquett, for a gentleman escorting a lady through a revolving door? Should he start it turning for her and thrust her in, or should he himself stride through first and let her float along in his wake?

That seems to be a point of manners strictly confined to big cities, and New York happens to be agitatng itself about the matter just now. The problem will never be solved until every such door is supplied with brakes and a speed regulator to lower the hazard for the Timid Soul. Until that happens the most satisfactory etiquette for the gentleman appears to be this: Remove one's hat, bow, face the lady toward the flying wedge, wait until the door stops revolving, give the dame a kick in the shins, and then whirl the contrivance vigorously. This saves false starts and always works.

New York gets a nice little surprise for April's Fool Day. All the restaurants in the city are going to raise their prices. The better places say they can't make any money on the present tariffs and in the lowlier dumps the corned-beef hash is slowly losing its ruddy hue as the potatoes get the upper hand of the meat.

One way to solve the difficulty is to stop eating. You'd be surprised to know how many New Yorkers are preparing to do exactly that. It's all a matter of habit, anyway.

April Fool

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

APRIL Fools Day, or All Fools Day, since fools are fools whatever you call them, had its origin in ancient India, where so many good things came from. Eight thousand years ago people were fond of playing practical jokes on one another, and in time it became expedient to set apart a day specifically devoted to the purpose.

It is generally believed that All Fools Day began in India to mark the close of the annual spring festival of Hull; they loved to send their friends on silly or impossible errands, or to fool them in any other manner.

• • • •

We are told April Fools Day began in England in the eighteenth century; yet Congreve in his play, "The Old Bachelor" (1693), says, "One of love's April Fools." The persons who were fooled in Scotland—where it has always been difficult to fool anybody—were named gowks, the Scotch word for cuckoo. The word gowk in this sense first appears in the English language in 1605.

In France the people, who are fooled, are called April Fish, something like modern American slang in the expression "Poor Fish." I suppose a fool is called a fish because a fish is fooled with a fake fly concealing a hook.

Some think that modern Europe derived April Fools Day from the French; because France was the first country to adopt the new calendar, King Charles IX making the year begin with January, instead of March 25. Thus, people who were slow to accept the new calendar got fake New Year gifts on the first of April. This explanation seems to me rather farfetched.

• • • •

When we were boys we all celebrated April Fools Day. And we had a neat way of double-crossing a dignified stranger, which proved our knowledge of psychology. One of us would tie something to a stranger's coat tails and then another boy would get in front of him and say laughingly, "Oh, Mister, see what's on your coattail!" and the dignified stranger would smile in a sophisticated manner and say, "Boy, it's April Fools Day! You can't fool me!" and then walk down the street with his caudal appendage.

Sometimes a boy would try to fool another on the Second Day of April, being unwilling to have the license expire so soon. To which the other boy invariably replied:

April Fool is gone and past,
And you're the biggest Fool at last.

The fact that the origin of All Fools Day can not be stated with certainty is best expressed in the old poem in Poor Robin's Almanac (1760):

The first of April, some do say,
Is set apart for All Fools Day.
But why the people call it so,
Nor I, nor they, themselves, do know.

The Once-Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Please, Mr. Schwab.

Oh, gangway, boys, and let me jump
Right off the nearest dock!
There's nothing else for me to do—
I cannot stand the shock;
I thought the sunshine might return
And hard times disappear—
But Charles M. Schwab got off a boat
And wasn't full of cheer!

II.

Dust off the pier and give me room
To take the final leap!
And may the water as I come
Prove fifty fathoms deep;
I thought that better days were near—
That hard times would desist,
But now I see the heavens crash—
For Schwab's no optimist!

III.

Farewell, farewell, oh, cruel world!
No use to linger now;
My chin was up for five long years,
But now my head I bow.
I braved depression's hardest blows
And took its punches, lad;
But what's the use? I now give up—
For Schwab says things are bad.

IV.

Let bulletins from Washington
Proclaim depression's end
And let the Brain Trust loudly chant
That blessings now attend!
My faith is gone beyond repair,
My hopes are dashed to hell—
For Charlie Schwab refuses to Declare that all is well!

V.

The bitter tears course down my mug,
And wash my chest and back;
For Schwab he meant so much to me
When things looked very black.
The world might talk in bleak despair
As chills ran down its spine—
But Charlie Schwab was always there
To say that things were fine!

VI.

There might be rows of idle shops
With cobwebs on the doors;
There might be miles of empty freights
And rent signs on the stores;
I might not have a crust of bread
Nor slightest hope of pie,
But Charles M. Schwab was there to shout,
"An optimist am I!"

VII.

Oh, tell us, Charles, it isn't so!
'Twill plunge the world in care
To think that after all these years
You have become a bear;
Oh, would you break our weary hearts?
Say "No." for pity's sake!
Be Charles M. Schwab of old and shout
That everything is jake

No End of Books

Mrs. Codman Takes Us On Hilarious Wine-Tasting Tour Of France; Harry Franck In Russia.

By Theodore Hall.

THIS first little book comes under the familiar head of French travel because Theodora Larocque Codman mentions the Louvre as a place to drive and visits the Cathedral of Chartres—where she was specially impressed by the curling toes of the saints. Otherwise, "Was It a Holiday" (Little, Brown, $1.75) has nothing familiar about it. Which is all to the good.

In a word, it is the story of a wine-tasting tour through the French vineyards. That, if written by heavier hands and laden down with vintage data like a wine merchant's catalogue, might not have been much of a muchness. But Mrs. Codman, albeit from Boston, is a thoroughly light-hearted lady. Here, for example, is her little gambit with the French customs officer: He asks, "Have you any cigarettes or cigars to declare," and she replies: "Oh, Monsieur, I don't smoke cigars! Pensez-vous?" He bursts out laughing at the very idea and chalks the bags. Not a one is opened. "Simple, but infallible," observes Mrs. Codman.

So you can imagine how she and her husband bounce around among restaurateurs who want them to try this vintage, agents who ask them to taste that, vine owners who take them down in the "caves" and open bottle upon bottle. There's a fine, friendly, happy-go-lucky air in all their adventures—which is like nothing so much as the deux scenes between Myrna Loy and William Powell in "The Thin Man." Anybody who saw the movie will know exactly what I mean.

• • • •

DRIVING around in a little Ford (during the heat wave Mr. Codman did this in his shorts), stopping to bathe in canals (to the astonishment of every one, including the horses), meeting village idiots and local gentry with equal aplomb, the Codmans had a tour we can only call hilarious. There were high moments, when Mrs. Codman proudly identified a Rayne Vigneau 1904 at an imposing tasting party. There were low, when the two of them—feeling not precisely well in the heat of Bordeaux after a day of professional sipping—went out to tea at the home of an hospitable Frenchman, were seated in a stifling room, entertained with recitations and mayhem on the piano by four children and offered (the hostess had done what she could to make the visiting Americans feel at home) a tea composed of ice cream, apple tarts and hot chocolate!

Like working in a candy factory, tasting wine as a profession is not all the envious outsider might think. Most rare was the intuition of the French woman with whom Mrs. Codman chatted at the fair in La Rochelle. Mentioning lions and leopards, Madame allowed that her husband was an animal trainer. "And what," she asked Mrs. Codman, "is your husband?" "Just a wine taster," was our narrator's humble reply. Whereat Madame remarked: "What a hard life!"

And possibly you might think so, especially at the climax, back in Paris after the tour, when a friend with the hobby of brandy spread 60 glasses on the table and 15 bottles on the sideboard and the trio spent two hours in eyeing, sniffing and rolling drops of the compound contents around on their tongues.

"Charlie," said Mrs. Codman to her husband later that evening, "we're going to Vichy."

"To Vichy?" He sat bolt upright in bed. "Good God, why?"

"To drink water. I've fallen in love with water. There is nothing so stimulating."

SUFFICIENTLY old is the jest about the traveler going to Russia for a month and then sitting down to write a book about it. But a man with the eyes and ears of that veteran globe trotter, Harry A. Franck, can do precisely that and make a good book of it. "A Vagabond in Sovietland" (Stokes, $2.75) holds 31 days of Russian rambling from Leningrad all the way down to the Caucasus and the Persian border, and gives us the most chatty and revealing of impressions. Illustrated with many photographs from Mr. Franck's ubiquitous camera—how some of them got out through the customs is a wonder!—the book displays one of his best talents, the persuasion that we are on the scene with him.

"I have gone abroad 12 times since 1900, sometimes for as much as four years at a time. I have spent a total of 14.7 years of my life outside my native country. I have seen most of the countries on this earth, some of them thoroughly, and I am inclined to say that the month I spent in the Soviet Union was the most interesting 31 days of all my travels, at least with the thrills of early youth subtracted." He passes this interest on to us, in a thousand vivid scenes and anecdotes. There's nobody like Mr. Franck to get people to talk with him.

• • • •

HERE are some of his freshly spoken conclusions—"property comes first in the U. S. S. R., just as in capitalistic countries • • • The Soviet Union is fond of calling itself a 'classless' society. Classless society, my eye! Watch a ragged, shrinking baggage-carrier trotting along beside an important Soviet official on a station platform! Communism? You should see how quickly the boy at a Russian station picked the largest bun in a food basket a friend of mine held out to him! Comradeship? Privilege always fights for itself, even for a train seat or a deck-chair • • • The Russian of today is so completely cowed that anyone with a commanding voice or eye can drive him around • • • Yet I can't quite analyze why I felt so good in the U. S. S. R. • • • Personally, I had no more sense of danger in Sovietland than in Omaha • • • I was conscious of nothing like the restraint one feels in most of the countries bordering the Soviet Union on the west. • • • It is a country where, with all its faults, the general atmosphere is one of seriousness of life and earnest endeavor, not always for your own precious self."

Anecdotes are fun, but Mr. Franck has done more and given us a sharp and intelligent book. What's 31 days when he has a head on his shoulders?

Siam's Boy King Stays Coronation Two Years

Lausanne, Switzerland, March 31 (AP).—Little King Ananda of Siam, who would a whole lot rather play with trains than rule his 12,000,000 subjects, today received the official permission of the Siamese Parliament to forego the coronation festivities and stay in Switzerland two years longer.

He was informed that the National Assembly at Bangkok had canceled the celebration in his honor previously planned for May.

Along The Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

The Spenders.

IT is impossible to appreciate the solicitude which is being poured out for Secretary Ickes because he is apparently to play an unimportant part in the new spending spree. It doesn't seem to be realized that Mr. Roosevelt is trying to be fair and give all of the spenders a chance with a view to determining which is the best spender in the end. Mr. Ickes had his chance, and the fact that he still has nearly half of his $3,300,000,000 unworking with a large bulk of the money he did spend going to the Navy, the NRA and what should be regular budgetary purposes, shows his spending ability is open to question at least.

BARGERON.

The way he has fought to get in on the new spending orgy does carry a touch of tragic. At a time when Harry Hopkins and Rex Tugwell were being of no assistance to the Senate committee at all, disclaiming any knowledge of what was to be or could be done with the money, Ickes told the committee eagerly a hundred different ways he could get rid of it.

And all during the period of uncertainty he was issuing little statements that the number of projects he could spend the money on had now totaled $5,000,000,000, then $10,000,000,000, then $15,000,000,000 and I think he finally got the figure up to $24,000,000,000. These periodical statements, I am sure, were in answer to everybody's question of "What in the name of goodness do they intend to do with the money?"

Somehow they never registered. The public went right on asking the question and it developed that apparently Mr. Roosevelt had not paid any attention to the statements, either. The questioning continued right up to the time it became known Messrs. Hopkins and Tugwell were to be the spenders. Everybody is satisfied now the money will be spent.

• • • •

The grievance against Ickes is that his spending was too cautious, his friends say, as if it were an outrage that cautiousness in spending should be held against a man. It is not unreasonable at all. In the first place there is the question of whether his cautious spending was not just as wasteful as any, as witness the Grand Coulee dam project.

One thing, however, is certain and that is that it was ineffective spending.

If another spending orgy is to be attempted as a means of breaking the depression it would seem to follow as a matter of common sense that we try another spending method. The cautious one didn't work. The alternative is reckless spending.

• • • •

What Mr. Ickes and his friends do not realize is that we are trying out various spending plans. Mr. Roosevelt never committed himself to any one plan. It is one of the delightful things about him that he can switch from one plan to another with the ease and grace of the man on the flying trapeze.

He seems to have been very fair to Ickes when he let him try out his plan first.

Now, when the reckless spending plan of Tugwell and Hopkins doesn't work Ickes can rest assured that they will be asked to step aside and a spender just midway between their recklessness and Ickes' cautiousness will be given a chance. There is nothing personal about it on Mr. Roosevelt's part. It is probably true that Tugwell and Hopkins are closer to him in friendship but in this spending race he has been absolutely fair. Give every spender his chance, that's what Mr. Roosevelt is determined to do. As a matter of fact, everybody is his friend, he is such a good man, and to say that he would show favoritism in a matter like this is to show utter ignorance of the man, or else to be a Republican or something of the kind.

Present plans only call for a three-cornered race, that is the Ickes cautious plan that we have had, the Tugwell-Hopkins' reckless one now getting under way, and then the middle-ground plan to be carried by someone as yet unknown.

The winner, that is, the best spender, we will make President as we did Mr. Hoover after his spending spree in Europe. We almost invariably promote our spenders.

George Washington's 'Prayer' Embroils Historians of Capital

A final paragraph in George Washington's letter on disbanding the Continental Army was the center of a controversy over the general's religious life that swept from New York to embroil historians in the Capital and nearby Virginia yesterday.

The battle began when the Freethinkers of America, Inc., filed suit in New York against Trinity Church, charging "fraud" in the sale of cards carrying what was represented to be "Washington's prayer for his country."

The Freethinkers charged the church with paraphrasing the final paragraph of a circular letter Washington sent the 13 governors in June, 1783, making a reference to the Deity sound like a prayer. They said Washington, as far as anyone knows, never prayed and that the story of the general praying for the country at Valley Forge and the painting based on it are particularly without basis in fact.

And Washington and Virginia historians, for the most part, backed up the Freethinkers.

Dr. J. C. Fitzpatrick, former Washington authority of the Library of Congress, said that Washington "was not a praying man, but a reverential man." He called the paragraph in controversy a "religious aspiration, not a prayer."

"The passage has to be taken with the rest of the letter to be understood," he said. "Take it away and you destroy the thought behind it."

Digging through musty documents from which he has constructed many an intimate detail on the life of the first President, Charles Callahan, of Alexandria, entered the fray by agreeing with the Freethinkers that there is no historical basis for the painting of Washington praying at Valley Forge.

Washington served as a vestryman of Truro Parish in Virginia for 11 years, Callahan said, adding that to do so "a man had to subscribe to the regulations of the church and take an oath."

"There is substantial evidence that Washington was not only a church worker and a church-going man, but that he was consistent in his affiliation. He was a man of liberal ideas, willing to attend any church, but he conformed entirely to the ritual of the Episcopal church. This was probably because the Episcopal Church was the established church.

"The story of Washington praying at Valley Forge was told by Izaak Potts who owned the house which was Washington's headquarters there. Potts told of coming upon Washington praying in the snow. But we later found that Potts was not at Valley Forge when Washington was there, and that he did not even own the house at that time."

The letter from which the "prayer" was taken, according to Dr. Fitzpatrick, is considered by historians of importance equal to that of his farewell address. In it he gives the governors suggestions on how to handle demobilization and expresses the desire for a Federal union.

The original draft is in the manuscript section of the Library of Congress and begins:

A Japanese Estimate Of British Diplomacy

Balance Of Power In Far East Described As Aim Of 'Asiatic Locarno.'

By K. K. Kawakami.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

TO no student of world politics has the reported discussion at Moscow of a possible Far Eastern Locarno come as a surprise. From the beginning it was evident that Britain's peace efforts in the present European crisis had a vital bearing upon the Far Eastern situation, or rather that the Far East was one of the important factors which actuated Downing Street to make those efforts. To England, peace in Europe is essential not only for Europe's own sake but to maintain the balance of power in the Far East. A European war at this time would oblige the Soviet Union to withdraw its troops from eastern Siberia, expose Britain's vast interests in China and the neighboring countries to Japanese inroads, and make Japan the undisputed mistress of that part of the world. That is a condition which neither Britain nor Russia would tolerate to be created in the Orient.

Britain's traditional policy has been to maintain a balance of power in the Orient as well as in Europe. In 1901 Mr. Francis Bertie, of the British foreign office, submitted to Lord Lansdowne, then secretary of foreign affairs, a memorandum on the Far Eastern situation in which were involved Britain, Germany, Russia and France, with Japan as the focal point. Said the memorandum:

"What Japan feels, or, rather, what is felt in that country, is that the Russian danger is advancing rapidly, and that it will not be long before Russia attempts to bring Korea within her sphere. Therefore, if Japan must fight for Korea, she had better do so over the Manchurian agreement, before the Russian railway is completed.

"It has been suggested that if Japwith Russia, and they crushed Japan, the result might be a renewal of the triple understanding—vis., Russia, France and Germany Those three powers would become supreme in China, and we should go to the wall".

• • • •

"IF Russia alone, or in combination with France," the memorandum continued, "defeated Japan, and we came to the rescue to prevent the obliteration of Japan, we should incur the lasting enmity of Russia and France, and a defeated, and probably ungrateful Japan would not be of much use to us as against Russian encroachments.

It has been suggested that if Japan defeated Russia there woul be grave danger to European interests in the Far East.

"A great military and naval power, with unbounded natural resources and an immense population such as Russia, is not likely to accept defeat permanently. She would reorganize for a further trial of strength, but such trial might be a long way off, and it would be greatly retarded by Japan being allowed to take as the spoils of war the Liaotung Peninsula. Its possession by Japan would be a guarantee that there would be no reconciliation between Russia and Japan. This would be an advantage to England and Europe. The yellow danger would be kept in check by Russia and the Russian danger by Japan. (Italics mine.)

"If we do nothing to encourage Japan to look to us as a friend and possible ally against Russia and France, we may drive her to a policy of despair, in which she may come to some sort of terms with Russia. I do not say that it is probable, but it is possible, and our interests would greatly suffer if she did."

• • • •

IN the above lines the traditional British policy of preserving the balance of power in the Orient is clearly stated, and it is that policy which has been persistently pursued by England. The first Anglo-Japanese alliance of 1901, was, as far as England was concerned, a move to maintain a political equilibrium not merely between herself and Russia but also between Russia and Japan, thus protecting her own interests first in China, and secondarily in Persia, Afghanistan, India, and Tibet.

Naturally, England did not want Russia to be so decisively defeated by Japan as to make her impotent in the Far East any more than she wanted Japan to be crushed by Russia. What she wanted was a condition which would restrain both Russia and Japan. Therefore, England wanted Japan to wrest the Liaotung Peninsula, the southern tip of Manchuria, from Russia, which "would be a guarantee that there would be no reconciliation between Russia and Japan," a stalemate which "would be an advantage to England and Europe."

As long as Russia remained a potential danger to England, a danger magnified by Germany's rising naval power, Britain, however apprehensive of Japan's growing influence in the Far East, needed Japanese alliance. When the World War eliminated Russia and Germany, at least for the time being, both in Europe and in the Far East, England no longer needed Japanese alliance, but, on the contrary, had to look for some other power which might serve as a restraining influence upon Japan, and thus reestablish the balance of power in the Pacific.

The result was the Washington conference of 1921-22 where England abrogated the alliance with Japan and did all in her power to befriend America whose growing influence would, she hoped, create a new balance of power in the Far East. Thus America was expected to take the place of Tsarist Russia to check Japan. Perhaps Downing Street saw in the United States even a virtual if not actual ally of England.

• • • •

ACCORDING to Britain's traditional diplomacy, Soviet Russia's military resurgence east of Lake Baikal was welcome for two reasons. First, because it restored the Russo-Japanese balance of power which had been upset by the obliteration of Tsarist militarism. Secondly, because it would keep Russia occupied in the direction of Manchoukuo and Outer Mongolia, thus preventing possible Red incursions into Afghanistan, Sinkiang (Chinese Turkestan), India, and Tibet.

For much the same reason, Britain looked with much misgiving upon a possible German-Japanese alliance. Such an alliance, if concluded, would oblige Russia to withdraw a large part of the forces she had concentrated in Eastern Siberia. On March 24, on the eve of Sir John Simon's and Capt. Anthony Eden's visit to Berlin, an Associated Press dispatch from London quoted a British "official spokesman" as saying that "Germany and Poland had better leave Japan alone," because they could not count too strongly on Japan's assistance against Russia, since the United States, with her powerful fleet and air route via Alaska and the Aleutians across the Pacific might suddenly turn the balance even more strongly against them."

The "spokesman" intimated, according to the same dispatch, that such was the line of reasoning with which Sir John and Capt. Eden would dissuade Hitler from lining up with Japan. One is reluctant to believe that such a crude argument was really employed by so seasoned diplomats as Sir John and Capt. Eden. But the fact remains that England would leave no stones unturned to forestall a German-Japanese alignment which would disturb the balance of power between Japan and Russia in the Far East.

THE apparently suggested Far Eastern Locarno is a horse of another color, a new scheme conceived to preserve the same balance of power. It envisages a European war which would compel Russia to withdraw her troops almost completely from eastern Siberia, which would, in turn, necessitate some scheme to check the consequent ascendency of Japan, even though Japan would, as most Japanese believe she would, remain neutral in the event of such a conflict.

Certain difficulties confront the conclusion of an Asiatic Locarno. Japan, no doubt, prefers to enter into a bilateral agreement with Russia along the lines already intimated by Litvinoff in his recent press interviews and also in the telegrams recently exchanged between him and Mr. Hirota, Japan's Foreign Minister. Granted, however, that Japan is agreeble to a Locarno, Manchoukuo may prove a hard nut to crack.

If the suggested Asiatic Locarno is to be similar to the European Locarno, it will provide for the guarantee of the existing frontiers. Would this mean the guarantee of the Manchoukuo-Chinese boundaries? If so, would it not signify recognition of Manchoukuo? Would China recognize Manchoukuo even by so direct a means as a Locarno pact? Would America swallow her pride and admit the defeat of the Stimson doctrine by signing such a pact? Surely Japan would reject the proposal if it were to ignore the existing boundaries of Manchoukuo.

Meanwhile Russia is ready and willing to recognize Manchoukuo. Mr. Litvinoff, in May, 1933, told Mr. Ohta, the Japanese Ambassador at Moscow, that the Soviet government would regard its signature to the Soviet-Manchoukuo agreement of the sale of the North Manchuria Railway as its recognition of that new state under Japanese protection.

Movie Boners

Hollywood, March 28.

THE Movie Boners Club is in session and the entrants will now become members by having their flicker flaw selections listed. In "Roberta," claims Lou Cody, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers start their fine dance, and when they do Miss Rogers' hair is curled up very tightly. The dance continues, going into more action, and Ginger's hair gets looser and wilder. However, when this dance routine finishes and Miss Rogers sits down, puffing, her hair is fixed—as it was at the beginning—in tight curls.

Concerning the same flicker, Orchestra Leader Richard Himber, who should know something about music, writes that there is an unmistakable sound of a harp recurring throughout the scene in which Fred Astaire did his dance. Yet when the camera discloses the orchestra which is playing there is no harp in the ensemble.

• • • •

"Maybe I'm partial to harps," says Himber, "because I was the first leader to use them in dance orchestra work on the radio, but nevertheless my statement is authentic."

And continuing with sound effects, E. D. Lambright says that in "The Whole Town's Talking," when Edward Robinson walked into his employer's office it was carefully conveyed to the audience that Robinson's shoes squeaked. When the same Robinson came out, no squeak. Perhaps some of the high-powered liquor given to Robinson in that conference gave the shoes the oiling they needed?

• • • •

IN "Let's Live Tonight," Lillian Harvey boards Tullio Carminati's yacht and remains there for the night, Carminati going ashore to sleep. Previous to their meeting, writes Arthur Murray, neither Miss Harvey nor Tullio had the slightest notion that she was going to board his yacht. Though she is dressed in evening clothes and doesn't carry any extra baggage with her, when Miss Harvey comes on deck the next morning, she is wearing a perfect fitting sailor suit. And Tullio isn't the slightest bit surprised—though we were.

• • • •

How does it happen, asks E. F. Murray, that Warren William in the flicker "Living on Velvet" can give instructions to have his plane placed in a hangar at Curtiss Field, when only a short time before the good movie public has witnessed said plane being landed at a field which is plainly captioned "Benton Field?"

And again, since when did Long Island sprout a nice row of California mountains?

There seems to be only one answer: The director was probably hoping that you would be like a supervisor and that you wouldn't be watching the picture too closely.

• • • •

FRANK LAWTON, in "David Copperfield," comes in from a snowstorm with some visible snow on the shoulders of his overcoat, writes Thelma Kaiser. After being in a heated room for several minutes none of the snow melts; in fact, the close-up of Lawton seems to reveal more snow on his overcoat than when he first entered the room.

• • • •

Continuing with messages, in "Sweet Music," writes Margaret Bushelon, Ned Sparks receives a telegram. When the telegram is shown in the close-up it is very evident that the person holding it has long, brightly polished nails. The person supposed to be holding it, for he's reading it, is Ned Sparks. Yet Ned Sparks didn't have long, brightly polished finger nails. They better match their shots better than this.

As yet there isn't a contender for the "No Flicker Flaw" championship. There hasn't been even a nomination. We dare them to make a flicker without a flaw.

Realty Bonds Continue Gain; District Third

10 Issues Here Increase 14.1 Per Cent in First Quarter.

New York, March 31.—The general improvement in the market value of real estate bonds which was evidenced during 1934, has continued throughout the first quarter of 1935, according to the Eli T. Watson & Co. Real Estate Bond Index.

During the first three months of the current year, the average bid price of the 250 issues in 39 cities in the United States and Canada which comprise the Index, advanced from $302.10 to $334.40 or $32.50 per $1,000 face amount while during the year 1934 substantially the same issues registered a gain of $77 per $1,000 bond. Washington, with an increase of 14.1 per cent for 10 issues, ranks third among the principal cities covered.

Following is a summary of the average prices as of the first of the year and as contrasted with those of March 29 together with the per cent gain.

	Average Price 1-2-35	Average Bid 3-29-35	Average Points Increase 1st Qtr.	Per Cent Increase
37 Hotels	23.3	26	2.7	11.6
12 Theaters	43.8	48.5	4.7	10.7
28 Apt. Hotels	28.5	31.2	2.7	9.5
37 Miscellaneous	34.5	37	2.5	7.2
69 Office Bldgs.	36.2	38.9	2.7	7.5

Of the nine principal localities covered by the Index, 10 Miami issues show the largest gain of 21.5 per cent for the first quarter. The average gain for the entire 250 issues during the same period was 10.69 per cent.

The following is a summary of average prices as of January 1, 1935, compared with those of March 29, according to location:

	Average Price 1-2-35	Average Bid 3-29-35	Average Points Increase 1st Qtr.	Per Cent Increase
20 Miami	21.4	26	4.6	21.5
10 Brooklyn	32	37.1	5.1	15.9
36 Washington	44.7	51	6.3	14.1
12 Philadelphia	20.7	23.5	2.8	13.4
14 Pittsburgh	21.8	24.5	2.7	12.4
10 Buffalo	30.3	33.8	3.5	11.6
13 Westchester	30	33	3	10
223 N. Y. City	33	35.9	2.9	8.8
36 Scattered	27.1	30.7	3.6	13.3

Of the 36 issues included in the above table under the classification of "Scattered," 18 cities had only one property included in the index and are, therefore, not separately classified. Of the cities with fewer than 10 properties but with more than one, Newark, with a gain of 25.6 per cent, made the best showing.

Bank Blames U. S. in Current Money Disorder

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31. — The National City Bank of New York lays a "grave share of the responsibility" on the doorstep of the United States for current world currency disorders in its monthly review issued today.

The world currency apple-cart, the bank says, owes its upset in no small measure to the devaluation of the dollar by the United States. Furthermore, it is stated, "it is a mistake to believe that this country can escape the consequences if the disorders become more serious or widespread."

What of early stabilization of world moneys? the review asks. In answer four conditions are set out which must be met before lasting stabilization can be attained.

"These conditions are: First, satisfaction in each country with its internal price level and the establishment of an internal equilibrium giving reasonable stability of prices.

"Third, a truce in the arbitrary interference with trade.

"Fourth, elimination of fiscal uncertainties and establishment of such security for capital as will prevent disrupting flights of funds from one country to another in search of safety."

Acknowledging that these conditions are huge obstacles in the path of stabilization, the analysis declares "it is not to be supposed that stabilization should or will await their perfect realization."

In the absence of such conditions, it explained, "premature stabilization would involve the hazards of drastic readjustments by countries whose export prices turned out to be relatively high, and whose international payments continued unbalanced. This is a danger from which all nations shrink."

"Hopes that stabilization would be brought nearer by arbitrary devaluation of the gold currencies should not overlook the difficulties described," the study concludes.

Farmers' Income Ahead of Expense

Cash for Live Stock Is Up 12% in Year.

New York, March 31.—Cash income of the farmers of the Nation from the sale of crops, live stock and live stock products has appreciated much more than the prices of commodities farmers usually purchase and the cost of services they employ. This is the conclusion reported by the analysis and research department of the Bank of America.

Live stock producers, whose gain in income lagged behind that of producers of other commodities, fared better during 1934, the survey reports. Receipts from the sale of live stock and live stock products in 11 Western States last year amounted to $471,930,000, which was a gain of $69,000,000, or 16.8 per cent over 1933.

For the United States as a whole, live stock brought cash income of $1,647,000,000 last year, which represents an increase of about 12 per cent over the preceding year.

Unemployment Figures Indicate No Progress Toward Recovery

Number Out of Work Now Larger Than It Was Last Year.

RALPH ROBEY.

of Finance, Economics, Business and Government appears every Monday morning on the Financial and Business page of The Washington Post.

By Ralph Robey.

Sentiment on the organized exchanges improved somewhat last week in spite of Belgium's leaving the gold standard and the continued gradual recession of business in this country. The general atmosphere, it is true, remained pessimistic, but appreciably less so than two weeks ago. At least this was the case in so far as the immediate future is concerned.

For a longer term point of view—say for the next year to 18 months—the outlook still is held to be without cheer. The most basic reason for this lack of ability to see any break in the clouds within the near future rests upon the unemployment situation. For regardless of all the efforts of the administration to get men to work, the fact remains that no appreciable progress has been made during the last year and one half. Unemployment today is as great as it was in September, 1933.

So long as this situation continues there is little point in arguing the question of whether we are making substantial strides in the direction of recovery. Lack of unemployment is not the only test, or even the best test, of the soundness of economic conditions. There may be full employment in a period of fundamentally unsound economic conditions. This was the case in the years immediately preceding the break in 1929. At the same time it can not be maintained with success that an economy is prosperous in which there is a large number of unemployed. The mere presence of the unemployed, quite regardless of the reason, is proof in itself that serious economic readjustments remain to be made. So long, therefore, as we continue to have a large number of men out of work we must recognize that the period of readjustment is not over. And so long as the number remains steady, or increases, we must reconize that we are not making positive progress in the direction of recovery. That is the situation today. For while the number of unemployed at present is much below the peak for the depression, it does not show that gradual reduction of unemployment that is characteristic of returning prosperity.

Administration Statements May Give Wrong Impression.

Those who question that there has been such lack of progress in reducing the volume of unemployment in recent months—and those who rely solely upon Administration pronouncements might well question it—would do well to study in detail the statistics for the last few years. Of course, these statistics can not be accepted as absolutely accurate. They can not be accepted as being even as accurate as numerous trade series currently published both by private organizations and the Government. But for the present purpose this is unimportant. For the point of interest is not primarily the actual number unemployed, although it would be better if we had such statistics, but the trend in the number of unemployed. And upon this trend one may assume that the statistics are reasonably reliable. This is because, with the basis for making the estimates remaining unchanged over the period, such errors as there are presumably will remain more or less constant and hence not change the general trend.

These remarks apply equally to all the various series on unemployment currently made public. Thus, in using the statistics as an indication of the success we are enjoying in getting out of the depression it makes little difference which series is used. Personally, I prefer, but perhaps for not especially good reasons, the revised figures of the National Industrial Conference Board. It is quite possible that the estimates of the American Federation of Labor are just as accurate and it may be they are even more accurate. In any case the federation figures consistently are above those of the conference board. On the whole, too, most of the estimates by Administration officials have been above the conference board figures. Insofar as current statistics are concerned, then, the conference board estimates would appear to give the benefit of any doubt to the side of "recovery."

In the following table the recent estimates of the conference board are summarized by quarters. For lack of space the figures are not carried back to the beginning of the depression. In so far as

Quarter	1935	1934	1933	1932
First	10,142*	9,935	12,946	10,131
Second		9,257	12,575	11,147
Third		10,011	10,745	12,070
Fourth		9,904	10,218	11,933

*January.

the point at issue is concerned these earlier figures would be of no importance. They show a constantly increasing volume of unemployment quarter by quarter. This trend continued without any interruptions until the fourth quarter of 1932. In that period there was a decline of 137,000. But the improvement was short-lived and by the first quarter of 1933 the total number out of work was at a new high—the peak for the depression.

First Six Months of New Deal Made Real Progress.

With the New Deal improvement began at once. The decline during the second quarter of 1933 was not large, being only 371,000, but by the third quarter of that year the number of unemployment had been reduced, according to the conference board figures, by two and one-quarter million.

Thereafter virtually all progress in getting more men to work came to an end. The final quarter of 1933 showed a little more improvement—specifically about 500,000—but both in absolute terms and as measured by the earlier trend, this showing was disappointing. It reflected clearly that something was seriously wrong in the policies being followed. For if they were sound the rate of improvement should have been better sustained. Since it was not sustained there was ample justification, quite aside from numerous other considerations, for the conclusion that the policies of the New Deal did not offer the means for bringing us back to a condition of full employment.

Such a conclusion has been strengthened quarter by quarter—and month by month—from that time on. For the figures show clearly that we are not gaining on balance. In fact the statistics provide ample basis for an even more pessimistic conclusion than this. For unemployment today is greater than it was a year ago. Yet during this fiscal year alone, or since last July 1, the Government has spent on emergency expenditures some $2,300,000,000.

Every dollar of these expenditures has had some effect upon our economy. Every dollar has tended to create business activity and thereby to make employment. This does not mean that total employment today is greater than it would have been without the Government spending. Quite the contrary. There is much reason to believe that had there been less apprehension because of Government activities, private initiative would have given work to more people than have been employed as a result of the Federal spending. What it does mean is that, granting the same unwillingness on the part of private employers to expand their labor forces, more men today have work than would have it if the Government had not spent the money.

If one combines this obvious truth with the fact that more people are unemployed today than were unemployed in the first quarter of last year, only one conclusion is possible. This is that the policies so far followed have caused us on balance to lose ground insofar as employment that is unrelated to Government expenditures is concerned.

The relation of this to the work relief bill and the failure of the passage of that measure to change the pessimism of business analysts on the long-term outlook, is too evident to need special consideration.

World Cotton Output Off 3,000,000 Bales

New York, March 31.—World production of commercial cotton this season was about 3,000,000 bales smaller than last season, according to a report issued by the New York Cotton Exchange Service. Production in the United States was about 3,000,000 bales smaller than last season and about 5,500,000 bales smaller than on an average in the five seasons just prior to the beginning of the depression.

Production of foreign cotton was slightly smaller than last season, and about 2,500,000 bales larger than the predepression average. Decreases occurred in some foreign cotton-producing countries, but these were almost completely offset by increases elsewhere. Foreign production was the second largest in the history of the world cotton-growing industry.

Market Takes $163,000,000 In Bond Issues

Extensive Financing Fails to Disturb Investment Demand.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31.—Bond prices underwent considerable shaking up last week, but the market was cheered by its ability to absorb without difficulty the largest amount of new financing offered in a year or longer.

As has been the case in recent weeks, railroad loans were the main drawback and the seriousness of their decline was reflected in a drop of more than 2 full points in the Associated Press averages for that group.

Other divisions of the corporate market, particularly utility bonds, finally learned how to harden themselves to the antics of the railroad loans and toward the latter part of the week were inclined to ignore movements in this group.

Approximately $163,000,000 in new bonds were placed on sale during the week, and in over-the-counter trading several individual issues quickly attained a substantial premium. Included in the new offerings, a large part of the proceeds of which were used to refund outstanding obligations, were the $45,000,000 issue of Swift & Co., $16,000,000 issue of the Chicago Union Station Co. and the $45,000,000 issue of Pacific Gas & Electric Co. Heading the municipal and State division was the $34,300,000 issue of the Port of New York Authority.

United States Government bonds had an uneventful period, but the main trend of values was steady. Highlights in this division included the Treasury announcement that tax collections and other revenues of the Government were so improved that the weekly offering of discount bills would be materially smaller in the next few weeks.

The foreign section was beset by all sorts of unfavorable developments in Europe, including the Belgian government's devaluation program, a cabinet crisis in Poland and a continuance of the strained relations between the principal powers over armaments. Bonds of most all the countries actively concerned suffered sharply.

Bankers Establish Federal Bond Branch

New York, March 31.—Brown Harriman & Co., Inc., announce the establishment of a special department to deal in United States Government securities. The new department will maintain net markets in all United States Government issues, including Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Bonds, Home Owners Loan Corporation bonds, Federal Intermediate Credit Bank debentures and will also deal in Federal Land Bank bonds.

Arthur H. Klendl, manager, and James S. Baker, assistant manager, will direct the activities of the department from the firm's main office at 63 Wall street, New York. They will be assisted by a staff of several traders. Wire facilities have been enlarged.

Crude Oil Stocks Gain.

The Bureau of Mines reported yesterday that stocks of crude oil at refineries totaled 64,830,000 barrels on February 28, compared with 64,306,000 on January 31.

Daily average crude runs to stills in February were 2,529,000 barrels, an increase of 95,000 over the preceding month and 155,000 more than a year ago.

Steel Output Down a Point; 45% Capacity

Auto Demand Recedes but Farm Implements Supply Orders.

Cleveland, March 31.—Moderate reduction in steel consumption by the automobile industry, sustained demand from farm implement and tinplate container manufacturers, a slight improvement in structural and railroad buying—these represent the outlook afforded by present iron and steel market conditions, states the magazine Steel.

The view at this time is not so encouraging as it was at the outset of the second quarter last year, although miscellaneous requirements still are an uncertain factor and with those industries which recently have lagged may turn the present trend of steel production.

In completing the first quarter, steelworks operations last week dropped 1 more point to 45 per cent, down 19 from the peak reached in early February. Automobile assemblies rose to approximately 103,000, highest for any week since September, 1929, raising the output for three months to more than 1,000,000 cars, best since the second quarter of 1930.

Nevertheless, it became more apparent that the automobile industry is coasting along on parts and materials already acquired, as specifications were in reduced volume, holdup orders were issued by some of the leading manufacturers, curtailing sheet and strip mill operations.

Due chiefly to slower automotive commitments, steel ingot production at Youngstown last week dropped 8 points to 52 per cent, Cleveland 3 to 67, Chicago 1 to 46. Pittsburgh advanced 3 to 38, responding to a 5-point gain to 90 per cent in tinplate mills, and anticipating rail mill schedules. Pittsburgh steel pipe production, on the other hand, dropped 10 points to 25 per cent.

New York, March 31.—The committee representing Paramount Broadway Corporation bondholders, of which Peter Grimm is chairman, has announced that more than 70 per cent of Paramount Broadway Corporation first mortgage 5½s due 1951, have been either deposited with the committee or assented directly to the plan of reorganization approved by the committee.

Retail Selling Keeps Up Pace

Strikes Threatening Major Industries Prove Handicap.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31.—Old Joe Public dug down in his pocket this past week to give retail trade a substantial shove forward, but basic industries at the same time were badgered with conflicting developments.

Barring local impediments such as rain and dust, retailers sold spring merchandise in good volume from coast to coast, evidence that the late Easter trade definitely is appearing.

Analysts predict the high production rate will continue longer this year than in any year since prosperity peaks, although curtailment is anticipated as the number of automobiles manufactured equals potential public demand.

Carloading for the week of March 23 pushed up to 607,780, the second weekly rise which was more than had been expected at this time.

Electric power production dropped a fraction, but it still is at the best point since 1930 on a seasonal basis. Steel production, however, declined, a continuation of the downward move started in January. Some have attributed the drop to lessened demand from the automobile centers and a delayed demand from builders.

Textile makers were the third major industry faced with strike threats. A proposal to curtail production by 25 per cent for a limited period brought protests from labor leaders. Since the year-end spurt, textiles have been in the doldrums with the exception of filling of spring orders, a demand now ended for the most part.

Soviet Bond Coupons Are Payable Today

New York, March 31.—Holders of the 7 per cent gold bonds of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics may present their coupons covering the regular quarterly interest due April 1 for payment at the Chase National Bank of New York.

Interest coupons are being redeemed at the rate of $1.51 per 100 gold rouble bond, 40 cents higher than the indicated value of the coupon when the bonds were first offered on July 1, 1933, the increased value being due to subsequent reduction in the gold content of the United States dollar.

100 Stocks Fall 3.9% in March

Valuation Is the Lowest in Two Years.

New York, March 31.—The market value of 100 representative common stocks declined $474,472,000, or 3.9 per cent, in March, according to the monthly compilation of Frazier Jelke & Co. The valuation of the list at the end of the month was $11,647,30,000, compared with $12,121,502,000 at the end of February, and $12,541,205,000 at the end of January. The total valuation on March 30 was lower than at any time since April 30, 1933.

The loss for the month, compared with an increase of three-tenths of 1 per cent in March, 1934, and with a recession of 3.3 per cent in February. Only two divisions, the utilities and the metal shares, were higher at the end of March than on February 28. On a dollar basis the rails and oils recorded the largest losses for the month. The rebound in the utilities was approximately equal to the decline in the previous month.

Rail Bond Issue Is Due This Week

New York, March 31.—Public offering by a banking group is expected this week of a new issue of $6,400,000 4 per cent general mortgage bonds of the Lehigh & New England Railroad Co. issued to refund $6,000,000 5 per cent bonds now outstanding. The offering will constitute the first refunding into a lower interest bearing obligation by an operating railroad company in the current corporation refunding movement and is expected to be followed by similar refunding operations by other carriers.

The lines of the Lehigh & New England, chiefly a coal carrying road, extend from Carbon County, Pennsylvania, to Campbell Hall, New York, where connection is made with the New York, New Haven & Hartford and New York Central.

Canadian Financing.

New York, March 31.—Canadian government and municipal financing during the first three months of 1935 totaled $71,213,600, compared with $73,202,653 in 1934, and $19,183,943 in 1933, according to figures compiled by Wood, Gundy & Co. Ltd. All financing in these three months over the past three years has been taken care of through the sale of internal issues.

Business Gains In Southeast

Department Store Sales 5.3 Per Cent Higher Than a Year Ago.

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Ga., March 31.—A story of improving business in the Southeastern States was written today in the monthly review of the Sixth District Federal Reserve Bank.

February business statistics for the district, the bank reported, "indicate an increase over January in department store sales somewhat larger than usually occurs at that time of year, an increase in pig iron production in Alabama and in coal mining in Alabama and Tennessee, and a gain in building permits issued at reporting cities."

Department store sales reported by 60 firms located throughout the District, the review said, increased 6.9 per cent from January to February and were 5.3 per cent larger than in February, 1934. On the daily average basis, the report added, the sales were 15.8 per cent better in February than in January. The usual increase is 11.4.

Total sales during the first two months of the year were 6.1 per cent better than for the first two months of 1934 and stocks of merchandise in February were 5.2 per cent higher than last year. Bank debits to individual accounts, showing the checking transactions, were 1.7 per cent higher than a year ago.

Building permits at 20 reporting cities, increased 9.4 per cent from January to February and were 11.4 per cent greater than a year ago. The two months of 1935 showed an improvement of 3.9 per cent in residential awards over last year's first two months.

February sales, by 95 reporting wholesale firms, showed a decrease of 1.8 per cent from January and cotton consumption in three reporting States declined 12.8 per cent from January to February.

From February 13 to March 13, there was a further "small increase in the volume of discounts of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta and holdings of United States securities also increased somewhat," the review said.

It added that the annual report of the United States Department of Agriculture for the 1935 season indicated that on March 1 farmers intended to plant larger areas to nearly all the principal crops excepting potatoes and cow peas.

NOTE—Tune in on Station WJSV Every Friday 6:30 to 6:45 P. M.

Are your evenings at the bridge table made miserable because you still play the old Dubb One-Two-Three System: bid one . . . should make two . . . go down three? Do you shudder with embarrassed uncertainty when your partner bids Two No-Trump? Won't your wife speak to you on the way home? Are you haunted for days afterward by the ghosts of those spades you failed to discard . . . that good ace you trumped? Ah, ha! We suspected as much. You are a sufferer from that dread disease, B. I. (Bridge Inferiority).

But do not despair! You, too, can once again resume your place in Society. You will be in demand almost as much as the Man Who Can Speak to the Waiter in French. Men will respect your opinion . . . and buy you drinks. Women will admire you . . . and ask you to hold their hands. And you don't have a clip a coupon to accomplish all this! Just read (and follow) the bridge advice of Ely Culbertson and Frank Lord in The Washington Post.

Bridge (do we need to tell you?) is no longer just a game . . . it's a Social Necessity. And if you respond incorrectly to a doubled three-spade bid, you'll never again be invited to Baroness Broadbeam's gilt-and-crystal manse. You won't even be allowed to sit in with the boys in the back room down at Joe's Place.

If you want to be welcome everywhere . . . read Culbertson. He'll teach you more bridge tricks than even Hoyle ever suspected. Culbertson has written more about bridge than Edgar Wallace wrote about Scotland Yard. He has met challenge after challenge without suffering defeat (ask Hal Sims or Sidney Lenz!) and recently he vanquished a British team and demonstrated conclusively that London bridge is falling down. Culbertson is Official Kibitzer to twenty million bridge players. After studying his methods for a while, you'll play so well that even your wife will want you for a partner.

Too, Frank Lord, who is probably Washington's best known player, writes a column about this city's bridge circles and tournaments in The Sunday Post. His keen analyses will solve your problems.

Today . . . before you deal another hand or attempt another finesse . . . read Culbertson on Bridge. Then, tonight, amaze the Little Woman by making the correct plays for the first time in your life. And after all, it's nice to squelch the post-mortemers by telling them what Culbertson thinks about the situation in hand.

West Point Hop Well Attended By Service Set

Capital Group Is Depleted Over Week-End by Fete at Military Academy.

Over the past week-end, when in spite of discouraging weather people continued to pour into Washington to view the much-heralded cherry blossoms, the Capital's service set was nearly depleted, many having gone up to West Point for the hop at Cullum Hall and the other dinners and teas which are always on the social calendar at the Military Academy.

Among those who went up were the chief of finance, Maj. Gen. Frederick Coleman and Mrs. Coleman, who were guests of the former's brother-in-law and sister, Col. and Mrs. Clifton C. Carter. Miss Betty Greenlee, daughter of Capt. H. R. Greenlee, U. S. N., and Mrs. Greenlee, has been visiting Capt. and Mrs. Raymond Williams in their quarters on the post.

Gen. Amos A. Fries, retired, whose son, Cadet Amos A. Fries, jr., will graduate from the academy this June, is at the Thayer-West Point Inn. Miss Patricia Henry, daughter of Gen. and Mrs. Guy V. Henry, of Fort Knox, who is a student at Holton Arms School, in Washington, is passing her spring vacation with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney T. S. Williamson at the inn.

The list includes the homes of: Associate Justice and Mrs. Owen J. Roberts; the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt, Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Summer Wear Makes Debut Despite Cold Snap in Offing

Although the usual cold spell is expected before winter finally takes its leave, nearly all of the feminine members of society have sallied forth in straw hats, and chic suits and frocks, after having carefully tucked away their heavier apparel. And although the day decreed by fashion and tradition for the official debut of masculine summer head wear is yet a bit away—every now and then a pioneering panama is glimpsed.

The other afternoon Mrs. Arthur Taylor and Miss Elizabeth Brawner were seen out for a stroll in the bright sunshine. Mrs. Taylor was wearing a smart print of red, black and white, made on simple lines. Over this she wore a collarless coat of soft black wool. Her narrow-brimmed black straw hat had an effective banding of twisted silk in the three colors. Her gloves were of natural doeskin, and her pumps and bag were of black.

Recently Miss Wynne Hooker was glimpsed attired in a modish ensemble of blue and gray. Her trim little suit was of a soft blue-gray. Her straw off-the-face-hat was of dark blue as were her gloves, pumps and bag. To complete her costume she wore a double scarf of silver fox.

An interesting and popular young visitor in Washington is Miss Edith Colt, who is perhaps better known to her friends here and in the North as "Gi-Gi." Miss Colt is the daughter of Mrs. LeBaron Carlton Colt, of Boston, and is a neice of Ethel Barrymore. The other day she had on a smart frock of brown and white checked silk made on straight lines. The collar and cuffs were trimmed with plaitings of white crepe. Her saucy little hat and strap pumps were dark brown.

A few days ago Mrs. Richard Frederick Roper, whose husband is the son of the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, was snapped while shopping on Connecticut avenue. Her tailored suit was of black and white check, and her hand-knitted sweater was of a luscious shade of shell pink. Her sailor hat was of black Milan and her ties and accessories were black. The carnation in her lapel exactly matched the sweater.

Two Congressional wives frequently seen together are Mrs. Ernest Lundeen, wife of Representative Lundeen, of Minnesota, and Mrs. Clarence W. Turner, wife of Representative Turner, of Tennessee.

The other afternoon out walking they both were attired in knitted suits. Mrs. Lundeen's was of eel gray light wool with a blouse of Roman striped silk. Her small hat and accessories were also gray, as was her unusual necklace. Mrs. Turner was wearing a boucle suit in rust with a large hat of the same shade and dark brown strap pumps and bag.

DRY COLD STORAGE DOES PROTECT AND PRESERVE FURS, garments, rugs and fabrics. Nearly 40 years the "Certified" cold storage vaults of the SECURITY STORAGE Company have been in operation. Never a damage by moth, never a sign of deterioration in fur or fabric. Hundreds of cases where furs have been stored 3, 4 5—up to 26 years continuously, and in fine condition, pelt soft and pliable, luster unimparied, when removed.

"Certified" Cold Storage means that our vaults have been inspected and approved by the American Institute of Refrigeration, the recognized authority in the refrigeration world, and their Certificate granted. Furs and garments stored in our vaults will bear the lock seal tag of the Institute. The cost of Security "Certified" Cold Storage is as little as $2 for a fur coat, $6 for a trunk of clothing, and the cost will be more than offset by the lengthened life of the garment.

New Product Makes Blonde Lashes Visible

By Ruth Anne Davis.

OF COURSE blondes have eyelashes! Sometimes it looks as though they didn't have eyelashes or eyebrows either. And isn't it a shame, for numbers of blondes have long thick lashes, and never get credit for them! But that's their own fault, for there's a new eye make-up ensemble which was created especially for them. This time the brunettes are just out of luck.

First of all there's a nutrient cream which you smooth on every night to coax the lazy lashes to new thickness and length. It's grand too for brushing a little bit on before you mascara if you want them to look silky, and soft, instead of beady and artificial.

Next comes an eyebrow pencil in the softest lovelliest shade of brown imaginable. Blondes simply mustn't use a black pencil. It makes them look hard and too apparently made up.

A brown pencil will give just the proper amount of color and not place undue emphasis on brows nor cause them to contrast too strongly with light hair. This ever so flattering little pencil comes in an attractive black enamel case which slips easily into your purse.

Of course a blonde must have a mascara for her lashes. Otherwise they are so fine and so light that there seem to be none there at all. If she uses a black darkener, the effect is very bad. Her lashes are glaringly black and horribly artificial looking. She needs a light natural looking mascara that will darken the lashes but not blacken them. In this new eye make-up ensemble she may buy a mascara which is perfectly suited to her coloring. It is dark enough to make light lashes noticeable.

It's spring and time for new wardrobes for everybody in the family, time for spring house cleaning, and time to spruce up the old furniture.

Why not begin by buying a new cover for your card table? You'll find a very special buy in a downtown store. This is a suede cover available in either red, green, brown, tan or blue and monogrammed in the same or a contrasting color. The price is $1.

String and Boucle Gloves.

Taking the laurels for popularity this season are two types of spring gloves, string and boucle. Both have wide, flaring cuffs, stiffly starched to give them that ever so debonair air. These are available in beige, navy, white, black and brown—and sell for $1!

A new pair of gloves will prove a big help in garnishing your spring wardrobe. Take a bright pair, for instance, and wear them with a dark suit, and if you have a hat to match the gloves, and possibly a purse, too, your outfit will be quite chic. With your new clothes you must have new gloves, for nothing makes a new outfit seem so hopelessly "wrong" as a worn and scraggly pair of gloves.

Combination Cream.

A certain well-known beauty expert, who has a lovely line of cosmetics, maintains there is no use in having to use three and four creams every night as long as there is one which is sufficient in itself. To fill this purpose she created a cream which is a combination wrinkle cream, muscle oil, and nourishing cream.

It has a remarkably fine texture and a silky, satiny sort of feel. You rub a little over your face and almost immediately it is absorbed by the pores. By using this excellent preparation consistently you'll be bound to see an improvement in your skin within a short time.

Don't put off giving your skin a thorough going over now, for during this betwixt and between seasons it needs special care. This many-purpose cream will enable you to keep it in fine condition.

Return of the Native.

NOW, AFTER YEARS serving demonic excess,
Exulting those whose god-passions send them mad,
I am stranded on a simpler shore, much less
Sumptuous—a land permanently sad.

Bearing a somber harvest—an old island,
With cactus and asphodel and olive on
The rock itself. This, oddly, is my land.

We toil—here toil has lost is hectic haste.
The outrageous wrongs men do lessen, diminish,
We are frugal, we share, we despise waste.
The work I have is good. It is not mine to finish.

THIS IS the tree that can not be overthrown,
These are the branches that leafless can still cast shade,
Here is the bud which canker may claim for its own
Yet can not devour. Oh, this tree was made

For you—for your uttermost need, for your black despair:
Though the whirlwind bow and the earthquake heave at its root,
It will rise in beauty and strength through the darkened air,
It will flower, it will bear fruit!

Do not despair;
You can surpass, with but little care,
Nature's malevolent plan.

Sharpen on doves. But you,
Lord
Of earth and air,
Can flourish nonchalantly everywhere

A formula for killing your own kind
With a fine phrase or two.

Rules for Tending Victims Of Head Injuries Are Given

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Injuries to Skull and Brain.

THE rapid increase in the number of traffic accidents has brought a corresponding number of head injuries. Fractures, injuries to the brain, and severe scalp lacerations predominate.

The first rule in head injuries is to combat shock and disturb the patient as little as possible. If the extremities are cold, heat should be applied and some means should be found to warm the body if removal to a hospital is delayed. Hot water bottles or even jars filled with hot water, securely wrapped to prevent burning of the skin, may be employed. If the patient can swallow strong coffee (not too hot) may be given. Care should be taken not to give large amounts of fluid, as this procedure may increase swelling (edema) of the brain.

Physicians who have had much experience with head injuries realize that handling or moving the patient lessens his chances for life. For this reason the X-ray examination may be delayed a day or more, unless there is positive evidence that a fragment of bone is pressing on the brain. Unconsciousness is not always a sign of increased pressure within the skull.

Infection must be prevented, as its presence may lead to meningitis. Therefore all lacerations of the skull should be thoroughly cleansed and properly cared for. If there is bleeding from the external ear or a dripping of clear, watery fluid from the nose (cerebrospinal fluid) special effort must be made to prevent the extension of infection. Escape of spinal fluid means that a pathway to the brain lies open to the entrance of bacteria.

Conservative treatment of head injuries is now the rule and accounts for the relatively high percentage of recoveries. Immediate operation is infrequently demanded by the condition of the patient.

Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow—Frances E. Appleton.

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, lonely from the loss of his first wife, found a second romance when he met Frances Appleton in Boston. The two were married and lived an idyllic life in Craigie House in Cambridge with their children until Mrs. Longfellow was accidently burned to death. The poet remained inconsolable until his death.

Wife Who Died in Fire Immortalized In "Hyperion."

By Elisabeth Ellicott Poe.

ON THE GOLDEN scroll of American poetry is written one name that men, women and little children alike hold tenderly because of the sweet spirit of the man who wore it during his earthly pilgrimage. It is that of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

On the day Longfellow was buried in his beloved Concord, Emerson, over whose mind the shadows already had begun to fall, remarked "The gentleman we have just been burying was a sweet and beautiful soul, but I forget his name." Posterity and fame had not forgotten it, however, and Emerson's vague remark is an example of Longfellow's intercourse with others. For, no matter how mentally awry they might have become, although his name might slip out of their failing memories, yet the realization of his beautiful soul would shine on through their darkness.

It is safe to assert that wherever you see a poet, 10 to 1 there is a good love story, either a passionate romantic tale, the fire and inspiration of his genius, a disappointed lover who paints his regrets and wild longings on the canvas of his gifted mind, or the great lover possessed of the fine, high spirit of a love that altereth not through changes of time, tide or space.

Descendant of John Alden.

The background of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, American poet, is of sturdy New England stock on both sides of his house. Through his mother, Zilphe Wadsworth, he was a direct descendant of Priscilla Mullins and her husband John Alden. The Longfellow genealogical chart led across the seas to Yorkshire, England, and substantial folk there.

William, the Longfellow immigrant in this country, settled first in Massachusetts. The family later moved to Portland, Me., where on February 27, 1807, the poet was born. His boyhood was passed on Casco Bay, studded with bold, green islands, later to serve as his inspiration, as the Hesperides of his dreams. It was a cultured, right-living, right-thinking family into which he had been born and at 15 his parents sent him to Bowdoin College to become that institution's most famous son. A classmate was Nathaniel Hawthorne. College days were writing days as well and in 1828 Longfellow was graduated fourth in a class of 38. He wrote the class poem.

The senior Longfellow disapproved of literature as a profession and Henry was set to studying law. But he could not forget his poetry and Blackstone was more or less neglected. Then came the fortunate offer of the chair of modern languages at Bowdoin. He did not accept it, but his father was so pleased that he consented to his giving up his legal studies and spending three years in travel in Europe perfecting himself in languages.

Met Shelley, Keats, Byron.

This was a wonderful period in his life and he drank deep of the love, languages, history and literature of European countries at first hand. He met and became the friend of Shelley, Keats, Byron, Tennyson and other poets of the old world. In 1829 he returned to America and accepted the post at Bowdoin, remaining there for six years.

He married in 1831 Mary Story Potter, a girl whom he had long known. During a trip to the Scandinavian countries in 1835, Mrs. Longfellow died, the first great grief of the poet's life.

Bowdoin without his "Mary" had lost its charm and he resigned and went to Cambridge to lecture and write. The atmosphere was such as to stimulate his gift for poetry and his first volume "Voices of the Night" was soon off the presses. Then came the "Village Blacksmith" beloved by children the world over, "Excelsior," "The Bridge," and other excellent poems.

Married Miss Appleton.

New romance was around the corner. Among his new friends in Boston was a certain Nathan Appleton, one of the founders of Lowell, Mass., whose son Thomas was a poet and whose daughter Frances Elizabeth Appleton was beautiful and lovely of soul.

After a time, Longfellow discovered that Miss Appleton had upset his theories that romance could blossom but once only. In 1843 they were married and Longfellow purchased quaint Craigie House in Cambridge. George Washington had resided in the house a short time in 1776. It was surrounded by beautiful elms which Longfellow so loved. Now professor of modern languages at Harvard, his life with Frances Appleton was ideal. Five children were born to them: Ernest, Charles and three daughters who have been immortalized in their father's own couplet:

"Grave Alice and laughing Allegra,
And Edith with golden hair."

All was sunshine, happiness, love, all a poet might wish. Publishers were clamoring for his work; his college duties were congenial and his fame was growing.

But it "was too bright and good for human nature's daily food." Fate had a dreadful blow in store for the happy Longfellow household. The wife and mother was burned to death in Craigie House in 1861. Her dress had caught fire and before the flames could be extinguished she had died in his arms.

Immortalized in His Verse.

Soon after that, Longfellow's hair turned snow-white. He never ceased to mourn the woman who had taught him the real meaning of love. These lines of his tell the story of his grief and love for her most vividly:

"Thou hast but taken thy lamp and gone to bed;
I stay a little longer as one stays
To cover up the embers that still burn."

Longfellow's genius grew and grew. It has been said that his best works were those which he wrote last. Personally he loved his "Hyperion" better than all his other writings, because his heroine, he thought, resembled his beloved "Frances Elizabeth."

He was heard to murmur her name when he died, with a smile on his lips, on March 24, 1882.

What Today Means

"Aries."

IF APRIL 1 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8:30 to 10:30 a. m., from 12:30 to 2:30 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:30 to 8:30 a. m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. and from 9:30 to 11:30 p. m.

Simply because this is All-Fools' Day, do not permit anyone to induce you to make one out of yourself. Practical jokes may result in serious consequences, so sensible people will refrain from courting trouble by refusing to participate in them if invited.

Be careful not to contradict anyone, unless you are positive that you are in a position to prove the justification for objecting to the remarks made. Married and engaged couples, as well as those in love, should be very careful that no action on their part on this date can be construed as being offensive.

If a woman and April 1 is your birthday, never be satisfied with dull or unpleasant surroundings. Your nature requires cheerful influences, both in home, as well as companionship, and both are procurable if you make up your mind that they are rightfully yours. If you are wise you will avoid reading morbid or depressing literature.

Church activity might be instrumental in bringing a great deal of happiness into your life. Married life is the logical one for you, and there is every reason for it being successful. You should take an active part in the social life of your community. Vocational lines through which a satisfactory income might be earned are: Teaching, writing, dietetics, or acting as saleswoman.

If a man and April 1 is your natal day, the thing most important for you to guard against is an overdose of ego. Having a personality that should make you very popular with both sexes, you have in that one of the greatest assets which helps one to be successful. Medicine, law, accountancy, literature, as well as salesmanship, should provide a profitable means of livelihood.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am a widow; 29 years old. I was born and reared in a small city in the Middle West and had a high school education. When I was 18, I went to work to support myself, since I was one of a large family and my parents had done all they could for us when they had sent us to high school.

* * * *

At 23, I married and went with my husband to the Southwest. We lived there until his death, two years ago. Then I got a Government position in Washington and came on here about 14 months ago. I can say without vanity that I am unusually attractive in appearance and have a good mind. I may also be something of a snob, in that I am only able to interest myself in others who are superior to myself, in appearance and accomplishments.

* * * *

Recently, a man who is something of a personage in his own right, and who comes from a family with a long tradition of wealth and culture has shown marked interest in me. In his company I have met, at lunch, dinner and other foregathering places in the city many of those persons who up to this time have only been names in the newspaper columns, or pictures in the rotogravure sections to me.

* * * *

Now, this is my problem: I find that to them I am only the vaguest nonentity and, neither my appearance, my name nor my remarks seem to register. I dress as well as I can afford, and always in good taste and with some smartness; I am fairly well informed, in a general way, about what's going on in the world, nationally and internationally; I have done enough reading to know who's who in literature, art and politics, past and present, and I can make passable small talk.

* * * *

Yet these people give me no more than a passing glance and an acknowledgment of introduction. Wherein am I lacking? Can I—or rather, how can I?—acquire that individuality of appearance and personality which might cause such persons to look at me with seeing eyes? I might add, truthfully, that I don't know why this particular man is interested in me. He has never said, and naturally, I can not ask. I feel it a part of poise to take his interest for granted. Am I right in doing so? Or should I frankly tell him how I feel about wanting to make a better impression on his friends? Do yo think he would understand and possibly advise me? INEXPERIENCED.

Appearance Uninteresting.

DEAR INEXPERIENCED: Next to being met in the right company, the social indorsement of first importance to a woman is appearance, in my opinion. Both men and women react with involuntary approval to a woman who suggests, at first glance, either great personal beauty or tremendous chic.

* * * *

She need not be a great beauty in order to give the impression of beauty. If she has only one good feature, she can create the illusion of beauty, providing the tout ensemble is skillfully wrought to enhance that one good point. It may be an exquisite complexion, giving her an air of superlative immaculacy—eyes remarkable for depth, color or expression; it may be lovely hands or a beautiful mouth, pretty teeth, an expressive smile, a stunning figure.

* * * *

Lacking that one good feature—yet beauticians say every woman has one or more claims to real beauty—she can concentrate on achieving chic. That is a matter of distinctive and becoming costuming, coiffure and cosmetics, subtly interrelated and subtly different from the prevailing mode.

* * * *

After appearance comes voice, intelligence, poise and education in the order named. A combination of these things, plus an intuitive ability to sense and reflect the other person's slant on life, gives charm.

* * * *

To solicit your escort's advice on how to make a better impression on his friends would be to risk classifying yourself as a social climber, I believe. It might be a terrific blow to his self-esteem and a death blow to his interest in you to discover you are looking over his shoulder at his background and social contacts, instead of accepting himself as enough. By all means take his interest for granted. It would be the height of gaucherie to probe him for reasons why he is interested.

Light Green Color On Smooth Surface Repulsive to Flies

If you want to make your home unattractive to flies, see to it that everything is light green in color and smooth-surfaced. Flies don't care for that combination. What they like is bright orange and rough surfaces. This has been determined by Dr. R. H. Fresborn, professor of entomology, University of California.

Dr. Fresborn learned the preferences of flies by setting up a large rectangular board painted with huge squares of different colors. Then he kept a chart showing the number of times the flies alighted on the squares.

Tapioca Gives Expert Touch To an Omelet

Dish Can Be Served in Many Disguises; Sample Menu Suggested.

By Dorothea Duncan.

EGGS are back on the housewives' shopping list. Not that they should ever have disappeared altogether, but prices are lower and eggs can be used with a free hand without considering the budget.

There is no excuse left to offer when your family demands a fluffy omelet. It won't help you to tell them you have no omelet pan, because an ordinary frying pan is being employed every day.

Don't worry and fret under the assumption that the omelet won't be a success, because there is a secret about turning out a perfect omelet that is just waiting to be put into practice. There is one simple ingredient that has been overlooked, but its addition will insure that stand-up quality which is the most noticeable characteristic of a good omelet. In plain words, if you add a few grains of quick cooking tapioca to your omelet mixture you won't have to carry it to the table on tip-toe for fear it will fall to the level of the platter before the family can be gathered together to enjoy it. Here is the recipe:

Fluffy Omelet.

1 tablespoon butter.
¾ teaspoon salt.
4 egg yolks, beaten until thick and lemon colored.
⅛ teaspoon pepper.
4 egg whites, stiffly beaten.
¾ cup milk.

Combine tapioca, salt, pepper and milk in top of a double boiler. Place over rapidly boiling water, bring to the scalding point (allow 3 to 5 minutes) and cook 5 minutes, stirring frequently. Add butter. Remove from boiling water; let cool slightly while beating eggs. Add egg yolks and mix well. Fold in egg whites. Pour into hot, buttered 10-inch frying pan. Cook over low flame 3 minutes. Then bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 15 minutes. The omelet is sufficiently cooked when a knife inserted comes out clean. Fold carefully and serve on a hot platter. Serves six.

The omelet is but one of hundreds of egg dishes that will help vary your Lenten meals. This basic fluffy omelet recipe can be varied in numerous ways, and each time it appears on your table in a new guise you will be praised for your ingenuity in planning new dishes.

Dinner Menu.

Grapefruit slices with grape juice
Onion omelet
Potatoes au gratin Buttered carrots
Romaine with French dressing
Whole wheat bread and butter
Washington pie
Coffee Milk (for children)

Onion Omelet.

2 tablespoons butter
1 cup chopped onions
¼ cup water
1 teaspoon flour
¼ teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper.

Melt butter; add onion and cook over low flame until onions are tender. Add flour and mix well; then add water and seasonings and cook 5 minutes. Prepare one recipe of the above fluffy omelet; turn out on a hot platter. Place onion sauce between folded layers of omelet and serve at once. Serves six.

The New Count.

Yesterday the new count went into effect and although I have heard opinions pro and con, the pros seem to have it. The stagger system is gone and with it many mental hardships for players lacking a mathematical mind. The simplifications seem to be held in high favor.

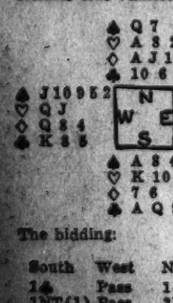
It is true, the devotees of duplicate must rearrange their tactics since one notrump now equals two clubs or two diamonds; seven notrump is no longer worth as much as seven of a minor with 100 honors; sacrifice bidding has also been affected. The change in the grand slam bonus does not affect these players, but certainly makes rubber play more equitable.

It is too early yet to pass final judgment, but I believe, after constant application for a few months, this new count will more than justify the work done by Whist Club Card committee, the collaborating foreign organizations and the American cooperating committee of which I have the honor to be chairman.

Declarer Fails.

A lot has been said about the value of giving the defense a chance to make a mistake. The same can be said about declarers. If a contract is obviously makable there is still no harm in giving declarer a chance to go wrong. East saved a game in today's hand by his clever way of inducing declarer to err.

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♣	Pass	1◇	Pass
1NT(1)	Pass	3NT(2)	Pass
Pass	Pass

1—One heart is a trifle better. It can do no harm to canvass the possibilities of the major suit.

2—With 2½ honor-tricks and a long suit, North decides that there will be an excellent play for game.

The Play.

West opened the Jack of spades on which the Queen and King were played, declarer holding up the Ace until the third round of the suit. A small diamond was led, and the ten-spot played from dummy. East casually played low.

Declarer saw that if West held both diamond honors he could not be shut out.

The Ace of diamonds was laid down, dropping East's King and a small diamond was led from dummy. When East showed out on the third diamond, declarer almost fell off his chair. West cashed his spades and defeated the contract.

Of course, declarer should leave nothing to chance. When the ten of diamonds holds he should realize that East, an expert player, might be "giving him the business." The way to find out is to lead a heart to the King and finesse another diamond. The Ace will then pick up the Queen with no risk of letting West in the lead.

Had declarer done this he would have made his contract, but his failure to adopt this best line of play does not detract from the brilliancy of East's stratagem.

Object—Not Matrimony

By Lillian Barker

Lovely young Katrina Harman, just out of boarding school, and mistress of her own fortune because she is an orphan, has splurged to impress a wealthy and charming bachelor with a new and sophisticated wardrobe. He takes her out to dance, admits that he loves her but indicates clearly that he is not interested in marriage. This in itself is a blow. They return to the home of the friend where Katrina is staying and Katrina is staggered to receive a telegram from her aunt saying that all their money has been lost. She does not even have the price of the expensive clothes she has ordered. Taz offers to lend her the money and she insists on giving him her I. O. U. Next morning, Elena, her hostess, brings her a letter from her aunt.

KATRINA opened the letter and read:

"Darling child: From my telegram you already know of the catastrophe that has befallen us. But now it is my painful duty to inform you that Elmer Parks, the Fulton County Bank president, was a crook who deliberately robbed us of our inheritances.

"Yes, Katrina, in a suicide note which has just been broadcast over the radio, this close friend of your father's, the man he trusted enough to make him your guardian, confessed.

"A criminal, a crook!" Elena again interrupted. "Your guardian, think of it! No wonder he killed himself after pauperizing a widow and an orphan, but go on, Trina." Katrina went on:

All Was Gone.

"He, Elmer Parks, whom everybody respected, admired, trusted, admitted that he'd appropriated your fortune and mine in a desperate effort to save his bank, which for some months had been on the verge of failure; that he'd even gone so far as to get a court order to dispose of all your property, stocks, bonds, real estate, everything on the pretense of wishing to reinvest your legacy in better-paying securities, when all the time he meant to use your money to bolster the assets of his tottering bank.

"On the same misrepresentation to me, promising to double my income, he induced me to sell all my houses and lots, stocks and so on, and pending reinvestment he used all my money (he'd advised me to deposit it in his bank) exactly as he had yours, in a mad and futile effort to avoid the crash that has ruined us financially and changed the whole course of our lives."

She Trusted Him.

"Of all the low-down, crooked dealings, imagine any man treating your aunt and you, his ward, like that!" Elena's indignation increasing, the epithets and denunciations fairly rolled from her always ready tongue. "Did you know, though, Trina, that Elmer Parks had sold your property?"

"Yes, he wrote me, but I trusted him and his judgment so implicitly I believed him when he assured me he'd more than double my fortune by wise reinvestments. Still, even if I hadn't trusted him, what could I have done? He was my guardian."

"That's true. He had the law on his side. He had full legal powers over you and your property, I mean," Elena amended. "Go on, though, Kid, and finish the letter. I don't want to miss a syllable. What else does your aunt say?"

To Live With Relatives.

Katrina read the rest of the letter:

"In my situation, having no funds of my own, I shall be forced to go to New Orleans and live with Genevieve. And won't you go there, too, dear? Gen has only a bungalow, as you know, but you could share my room with me and take a librarian's or teacher's course so as to become genteelly self-supporting. I'll sell some of my jewelry to pay your railroad fare.

"Wire me your decision, honey, in care of Genevieve, as I'm leaving Atlanta tonight —forever. Your devoted AUNT JULIA."

"P. S. Right after I received word of the bank failure I had a severe heart attack. But now I'm feeling better and able, the doctor tells me, to travel.

A. J."

A Pathetic Case.

"Isn't she pathetic, my aunt?" Katrina slipped the letter back into the envelope. "She might have died from that heart attack. With angina pectoris . . . that's what she has . . . any kind of shock is terribly dangerous.

"And imagine, Ellie, proud as she is, having to be dependent upon her son-in-law, Sam Hildreth! I could just cry my eyes out for Aunt Julia if crying would do any good; if it would only restore her fortune. I know she's pitifully crushed and humbled."

Wanted Independence.

"I know, it, too," said Elena, "and I'm as sorry as I can be for her, but I'm equally sorry for you, Trina. A girl just out of school, extravagantly brought up, used to every luxury! What will you do? Go to New Orleans and live with your cousin and aunt?"

"Never," replied Katrina. "Never! Sam Hildreth, a musician at heart and an architect by profession, a struggling architect, too, is barely able to support himself and his wife. So I certainly don't intend to go there and add to his burdens. No, I'll just stay on in New York and earn my own living."

Had No Training.

"Earn your own living!" Elena, suddenly on her green "satinmuled" feet, looked down at Katrina in incredulous amazement. "Without any training? Why, darling, what on earth could you do? You never earned a nickel in your life. How could you hope to —to just step out on your own? You don't know the very first thing about making a living.

"Besides," her eyes on Katrina's dainty, "ladylike" hands, "you aren't the working-girl type. You're one of those Southern aristocrats, born with a gold spoon in her mouth, reared in the lap of luxury and meant to spend money, not earn it. Why, child, out in the business world you'd fold up in no time at all."

Through With Him.

"So," as Trina propped her head against the pillow, looked, listened and said nothing, Elena, her hazel eyes illumined by what to her seemed like an inspiration, continued, "since you aren't qualified by birth or training to be a daily toiler, there's just one thing for you to do, remain here with us—we have oceans of room in this huge house—till you get married. Play your cards right and Taz Bronson will propose before you know it, too. And won't all the debs who've been running after him so hard be jealous-mad when they hear of your engagement?"

"No, no, they won't," differed Katrina, "for Tazewell and I are through. I never want to see him again. I wish I'd never seen him in the first place."

"You've just had a lovers' spat, now haven't you? Of course you have and I'll bet Taz will be back tonight repentant and more Romeo-ish and more irresistible than ever——"

"He certainly will not."

"He certainly will," Elena persisted. "If I have to throw a dinner party to get him here. Just leave everything to me, Trina, I'm the world's best little fixer.

"But," eyeing the forgotten tray, "here I've been keeping you away from your breakfast all this time. It's getting cold, too. Go ahead and drink your coffee and make up your mind to stay right on here with us while I dash to my room for some cigarettes. I'll be back in a second."

Trina Was Terrified.

The green pajamas out of sight, Katrina stirred sugar and cream into her coffee and thought: "Elena's the biggest-hearted girl in the world, but as if I'd—I'd stay here on charity!

"And," brushing away tears that were blurring her vision, "as if I'd stay here and subject myself to the humiliation of meeting Tazewell Bronson again! I'd rather suffer anything than to stick around and have to face him. Besides, the sooner I clear out and get absolutely on my own financially the better, the more independent I'll feel. I intend to leave today, too, whatever happens."

But where to go, what to do, even the sort of a job to look for, those questions were so bewildering and baffling. For all her resolutions, Trina was terrified. Terrified—and trembling.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

WJSV calls it Dark-K-Nights for some reason, but dark knights would do just as well. In any event (and under any title), you'll hear for the first time today at 5:15 a new program, featuring (a deep breath here, please) Bubber Wilson, proprietor of Wilson's Social Elite Pastime Pool and Billiards Parlor, Inc. and Ltd.; his helper and general factotum, the "Weasel" (no other name recorded); Lawyer Ambrose Mordecai Moody, prominent barrister, and Alec Profus Swink, proprietor of the Acme Barber Shop.

Bubber is the smart man of the crowd—acts dumb but has more brains than all the others put together. Alec is always getting into scrapes and is fished out by the others; Wessel sleeps during most of the script, sleeps standing up, sitting down, holding on to the mike. The barrister is just that—big legal terms used the wrong way.

This act will be heard each Monday, Wednesday and Friday, same time, same station.

Stafford Fox Thomas writes: "We, together with a number of our friends, are very much disappointed that our local station, WJSV, has eliminated H. V. Kaltenborn from their program tonight (March 29) and last Friday evening. We enjoy Kaltenborn's broadcast almost more than any other we hear, and would like to enlist your aid in seeing that he is not omitted from our local station."

Beginning today The Washington Post programs, formerly on WJSV at 10:45 a. m., will be heard at 1:30 p. m. Today Hope Ridings Miller begins a series of talks on American poets—the first being Edward Arlington Robinson.

Musical programs:

Lily Pons sings tonight instead of Lucrezia Bori. Her program—WJSV, 9 p. m.—includes "Le Tableau," from "Manon;" Saint-Saens' "Theme Varie," "April in Paris" and "Cabaletta," from the opera "I Puritani."

An all-Brahms program is on WMAL, 2 p. m. Selections include numbers for vocal quartet and two pianos.

Gladys Swarthout, WRC, 8:30 p. m., sings "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson and Delilah" and other lighter selections.

Two good dramatic events today are: "Professor," a three-act comedy on WMAL, 9:30 p. m., with Francis X. Bushman in the leading role, and "The Feast of Jest," a barbaric tale of Florence in the time of the Medici, on WMAL, 3 p. m.

Lawrence Gilbert Harrison, son of the late "De Lawd," tells his father's definition of contentment on the "Contented Hour," 10 p. m., WRC. Also, there's a musical April Fools Rhapsody, during which almost anything may happen.

"Grandpa Burton" starts a series of "tall" stories on WRC today; continues each Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Grandpa is a man of many voices, and, during his talks, he'll often take the parts of nine characters.

This is a children's program—indorsed by the Children's Radio Betterment League of Chicago. Nice to know there is such an organization.

Senator Adams discusses "The Administration's Bill Revamping the Federal Reserve System," WRC, 10:30 p. m.

The first American motohome is dedicated by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, WMAL, 12 noon. Motohome is a new kind of building material—for further details consult your radio dial.

A series of talks, urging you to observe conservation laws starts on WJSV today, 4:45 p. m. Harry G. Vavra, of the Educational Conservation Society, is heard on "Public Conservation Education."

List of Words For Spelling Bee Soon Available

Much Interest Evidenced in Contest Sponsored by The Post.

Within a week printed copies of the official word list for the National Spelling Bee will be ready for distribution, and will be mailed to principals and teachers who have enrolled their schools in the match which is being sponsored in 32 counties in Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland by The Washington Post.

The list, compiled from spelling books in accepted use in representative schools, contains the words to be given at the county finals in this territory. For this reason it will be a great help in studying for the match, and teachers are urged to enroll their schools at once so the list can be sent to them promptly, to be studied in the month preceding the county matches.

Additional Entries.

St. Mary, Bryantown, Charles County, Md., enrolled by Sister M. Gemma.

While the number of schools entered is growing daily, the territory covered by the competition is large, and the entries must roll up in the next month to insure a lively contest in each county. Realizing that the rivalry aroused will do much to stimulate an interest in spelling, the majority of county superintendents have urged their principals and teachers to enter enthusiastically into the contest. Enrollments should be made at once so that adequate preparations can be made for each county contest.

Valuable Prizes Offered.

Some boy or girl in this territory is assured of winning a 12-volume set of the Encyclopaedia Britannica Junior, for this is being offered by The Post to the champion of the area. That same boy or girl will enjoy the thrill of being entertained in Washington, with champions of other parts of the country, at a round of parties and sight-seeing tours, including a visit to the White House. Second prize in the area finals will be a four-volume set of Champlin's Young Folks Cyclopaedia.

Other prizes will be a copy of the Wonderbook of Knowledge, to be given to the best speller in each of 32 counties, and the New Century Dictionary, to be given for second place in each county match.

Annapolis, Md., March 31.—Whether an attempt will be made to enact any additional legislation in connection with the relief program in order to allay the uncertainty existing with the Federal Relief Administration officials, was the subject of speculation in legislative circles over the week-end, as the Maryland General Assembly prepared to enter the final day of the biennial session of 1935.

Under the State constitution sine die adjournment is fixed for tomorrow midnight, but indications are that it will be in the early hours of Tuesday morning before the gavels fall. A mass of bills is on file in both the Senate and House.

By working until near last midnight, both houses eased the situation sufficiently to avoid a Sunday session. They are scheduled to reconvene at 10 o'clock and, except for brief recesses, the grind will be continuous throughout the day.

Excise Held Insufficient.

Aside from the routine confronting them, leaders of the respective branches had much to ponder over the week-end, in view of the series of messages from national relief officials expressing doubt that the 1 per cent retail gross receipts tax enacted by the Assembly will produce sufficient revenue, and sounding a warning that no stone should be left unturned if Maryland is to participate fully in the distribution of Federal funds.

The tenets were ignored, at least temporarily, but Gov. Nice stepped into the breach by staving off signing the 1 per cent tax measure, as he had planned to do Saturday, stating that he wanted to give the Legislature every opportunity to formulate a more satisfactory program.

Advocates 2 Per Cent Levy.

He advocated the 2 per cent consumers' sales tax as the only way out of the difficulty, and as Federal authorities did, expressed grave doubt that the gross receipts tax would bring in the needed revenue.

The 2 per cent tax is calculated to produce $6,000,000, of which $4,500,000 would be for unemployment relief, and $1,500,000 for an old-age pension fund, thereby fulfilling the State's original promise. The 1 per cent gross tax is figured to bring $5,000,000; most estimates placing the maximum around $4,100,000, however.

Gov. Nice stated that any day within the week would be ample time to approve the pending measures, which he would do, though "reluctantly," because of the critical situation, and notwithstanding the fact that the law was written to become operative tomorrow.

Rural Carrier at New Market Retires With 30 Years' Service

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New Market, Va., March 31.—With the unusual distinction of being the oldest rural mail carrier in point of years of service at the local post office and at the same time being perhaps one of the youngest rural carriers ever to retire after 30 years of service, John H. O'Roark, 51, today joined the ranks of the Government's army of retired employes.

Entering the postal service in 1905, at the age of 21, Mr. O'Roark's route, No. 1, extended for approximately 20 miles in the mountain sections of southeastern Shenandoah and northeastern Rockingham counties. The major portion of his route lay in the section adjacent to Smith's Creek, a stream which frequently became swollen and made his task hazardous because of being forced to ford the flood waters. On occasions when the stream became too high to ford, and these were frequent occasions, Mr. O'Roark was forced to travel from 10 to 15 additional miles in order to serve all his patrons.

Extensions were made from time to time on route, No. 1, and today the original 20-mile route first traveled by Mr. O'Roark has been lengthened to about 35. In estimating the number of miles he has traveled in serving his patrons during his 30 years of service, Mr. O'Roark finds the total will figure well over 200,000, or mileage sufficient to circle the earth more than eight times.

One of the last carriers in this section to adopt the automobile, Mr. O'Roark says Old Nick, a thoroughbred black mare, and a little box-like tin mail wagon assisted him in traveling more than half the distance. Two automobiles have been worn out on the remaining 100,000 odd miles.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., March 31.—Bloodhounds from the Lorton Reformatory today aided in the capture of the second of two colored convicts who overpowered and beat Lewis G. Stewart, Stafford County constable, and Douglas Gray, Stafford game warden, Friday morning when they attempted to place the fugitives under arrest on suspicion.

The man caught today, James Johnson, 29, said that he and a half brother, George Field, 19, who was captured by Lorton officers Friday night, escaped several weeks ago from a convict camp near Warrenton, N. C., where they were serving terms for housebreaking.

Johnson was seen early this morning by State Policeman Sam Sneed on the highway. Officer Sneed gave chase, but was unable to overhaul Johnson. Shortly before noon a posse of Stafford and Lorton officers with bloodhounds took up the hunt. The dogs chased Johnson into a thicket, where he was taken without resistance by Constable Stewart and Marvin J. Best. Both men are held in Stafford County jail pending a preliminary hearing.

Mothers Face Cut in Pensions At Cumberland

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., March 31.—The increase in the number of mothers' pensions in Allegany County has made it necessary for the board of county commissioners to make a cut in amounts being received by some of those on the relief, it was reported yesterday.

Following a conference with Miss Grace Lee Maymon, executive secretary of the county welfare board, the commissioners were asked not to make a horizontal cut of amounts received by all those on that form of relief but to allow her to see what reduction can be arranged by discontinuing some of the pensions where the need has been alleviated.

Miss Maymon said she had prepared a list of those now receiving such pensions. Some of those on the list can be discontinued because of means found for their livelihood. One family, she said, is able to do without the pension for the summer because the pensioner can farm her land. Another could be taken off because of employment being found, while still another could be cut because several in the family had become self-supporting.

The county has an appropriation of $7,600 a year to take care of pensions.

McSwain Urges Bigger Defense In Legion Talk

By the Associated Press.

Cambridge, Md., March 31.—Representative John J. McSwain (Democrat), South Carolina, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, stressed the need of an adequate Army and Navy, in view of the troubled situation in Europe, at an American Legion-sponsored patriotic rally here this afternoon.

Despite inclement weather, more than 500 persons from all sections of the Eastern Shore crowded into the Cambridge Armory to hear local, State and national notables assail communism, and urge increased armaments. The meeting was sponsored by the Dorchester Post, No. 91, of the legion, and was presided over by Jonothan Whatley, commander of the post.

The legionnaires took the oath of loyalty to the flag. This was followed by the invocation by the Rev. O. B. Newton, pastor of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Mme. Cantacuzene-Grant, a granddaughter of President Grant, spoke on communism, and John McNulty, State commander of the legion, talked on legion-sponsored legislation which has been passed by the General Assembly.

Virginia Area Laying Plans For Primary

Northern Neck Voters to Name Officials in August.

Chilton and Weymouth to Enter Contest in Northumberland.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., March 31.—Keen interest is being manifested throughout the Northern Neck in the coming August Democratic primary, with candidates out for the State Senate, House of Delegates, county and district officers. No formal announcements have been made for the various county and district officers in Northumberland County, but Robert H. Chilton, jr., incumbent, and Daniel Weymouth, attorney, have informally expressed themselves as candidates for Commonwealth's attorney of Northumberland. All of the other county officers are expected to again seek election.

At present the officers are H. M. Walker, clerk; Carroll J. Rowe, treasurer; J. Snowden Hudnall, commissioner of revenue, and J. E. Anderson, sheriff. Members of the County Board of Supervisors are H. W. Gill, chairman; Dr. Robert E. Booker, Dr. R. L. Hudnall and Ira D. Hinton.

No Primary in Lancaster.

Lancaster County does not hold a primary. Its candidates are voted for at the general election in November. Archie R. Beane, treasurer, will be opposed by W. A. Eubank, jr.

There will probably be no contest for the offices of Commonwealth's attorney and sheriff.

In Westmoreland County it is reported that Mrs. William G. Walker, of Montross, will oppose Charles Beale for commissioner of revenue. None of the other county officers so far have opposition.

Norris to Run Again.

Senator Robert O. Norris, jr., of Lancaster County, who represents the Lancaster District in the upper branch of the State Legislature, is expected to again seek reelection. It is not thought that Norris will be opposed.

R. Hill Fleet, of Irvington, will ask for the Democratic nomination to the House of Delegates from the counties of Lancaster and Richmond.

'No Work, No Relief,' Becomes VERA Motto

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Staunton, Va., March 31.—Harold G. Chandler, of this city, area administrator of the VERA, has transmitted to his subordinates instructions from State headquarters that: "No work, no relief."

This applies particularly to home gardens. There must be a puncture-proof excuse in order for any person or family to be excused from having, planting, and working a garden this year. If plots are available on their own premises, or if arrangements can be made for them to secure plots nearby, they must work them. If they don't, every person found "guilty" of not gardening will be deprived of further VERA assistance.

Canners' Group Will Urge Cut In Labor Rates

Tidewater Association Will Make Request Through Committee.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Tappahannock, Va., March 31.—At a meeting of the Tidewater Canners Association held in the courthouse here a committee of five was appointed to appear before the deputy administrator in charge of the canning code in Washington, and before the Senate committee investigating NRA, to present an application from the canners association for a reduction in code labor rates. The committee selected to serve are J. R. Hinton, chairman; H. P. Taylor, T. D. McGinnes and R. L. Griffith. R. O. Norris, jr., of Lancaster, was asked to accompany the committee in the capacity of counsel.

Speakers on the Tappahannock program were John J. Corson, acting NRA director; Weld Stevens, deputy administrator from the Washington NRA office, and Senator R. O. Norris, jr., of Lancaster County. S. K. Heard also attended the meeting.

The Tidewater canners are much perturbed over the NRA code situation. Senator Norris viewed the code from the canners' standpoint and stated if they found it impossible to operate under the present provisions of the code, as many of them had told him was the case, he would advise them in the same manner as he would a client, to operate under their own regulations and then leave it up to the Government to hale them into court for contempt of the law.

Leader Asks Drys' Drive In 48 States

Expects to See Country Return Prohibition, Dr. Wilson Says.

Delivers 2 Addresses in Methodist Churches of Crisfield.

By the Associated Press.

Crisfield, Md., March 31.—A dry campaign to "win back the States one by one" was proposed today by Dr. Clarence True Wilson, who said he expected "to live to see our country completely and permanently dry."

Dr. Wilson, executive secretary of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church, spoke at the Asbury Methodist Episcopal and Emmanuel Churches here. He spoke at the Asbury Church in the morning and at the Emmanuel Church at night. He asserted:

"We must win back the States one by one, as we secured four last fall, into the dry column, and we should not plan for national prohibition until we have 40 States that have outlawed the liquor traffic on their own initiative and voted their decision and have made good on the enforcement of the law."

The national prohibition leader said "repeal of prohibition laws is a failure. It has not reduced taxes or cured the depression. It has not stopped bootlegging or rum running or decreased lawlessness. It is lame in logic and a failure in practice, wrong in principle and powerless as a remedy, a fool's bargain in finance and a Judas Iscariot deal in morals."

Answering a question, "What are we going to do about it?" Dr. Wilson said "we must start all over again an educational program" and "we must have a 'no drinking' campaign of education and persuasion that will raise up a generation of total abstainers from all intoxicants." He then outlined the plan for putting the States "one by one" into the dry column.

Cooper Cards 73 in Heavy Rain to Lead Atlanta Golf Field

Picard Trails By 2-Shot Margin

Final Round Postponed Until Today Due to Terrific Storm.

Mangrum and Nelson Are Among Threats in $2,000 Event.

By the Associated Press.

ATLANTA, March 31.—Lighthouse Harry Cooper, of Chicago, veteran professional, stroked his way into the lead today in the $2,000 Metropolitan Open golf tournament with a 36-hole total of 142.

The dark-haired club wielder, playing through a terrific rain storm that forced postponement of the final 18 holes until tomorrow afternoon, turned in a card of 73, 2 over par, to add to his flashy 69 of yesterday that placed him in a three-way tie with Gene Cook, Anderson, S. C., pro, and Johnny Revolta, of Milwaukee, for the lead after 18 holes.

Picard Is Trailing.

Henry Picard, of Hershey, Pa., recent winner of the Charleston Open and one of the leading money winners of the winter tournaments, was two strokes back of Cooper with a total of 144. Picard had a second-round 74.

Carding a 73, Ran Mangrum, Los Angeles, posted a 36-hole total of 145 for third place. Trailing him a stroke was Byron Nelson, Texarkana, Tex., professional, who added a 75 to his par 71 yesterday.

Cook and Revolta each collected 78s, both having trouble on the greens, and dropped into a five-cornered deadlock with Horton Smith, Oak Park, Ill.; Willie Goggin, San Francisco, and Charlie Yates, Atlanta, national intercollegiate champion, for fifth place, with totals of 147.

Laffoon Shoots 78.

Ky Laffoon, Denver, who won the Inaugural Metropolitan last spring, also was forced to take a 78, seven over regulation figures, and dropped into a two-way tie with Paul Runyan, White Plains, N. Y., who scored a 75, for tenth place in the standings with 148s. Sam Parks and Jules Huot, of Quebec, were next with 149s.

Aided by the cloudburst, par withstood the assault of all the stars with the lone exception of Horton Smith, who equaled standard figures with a 71.

McLeod Is Off For Augusta Title Golf

By Dave Herman.

TWENTY-SEVEN years ago Open golf champion of America, today just another one of the professionals who has been through the mill, Fred McLeod, of Columbia Country Club packed his duds and shuffled off to Augusta, Ga., yesterday to mingle with the greats and former greats who are mobilizing this week for Bobby Jones' $5,000 Master's Champion-

Acknowledged by Jones and Gene Sarazen as the most spectacular bunker player in the game despite his 50-odd years, McLeod is the District's lone participant in the most exclusive tournament of the season.

McLeod is one of several former Open and Amateur champions invited by Jones to participate in the event. Fred and the boys are going to revive a thousand memories once on the scene of the battle, for it's no secret that the little Columbia pro likes to talk about the past, and about the ime he gummed up a couple of shots in the 1910 Open at Philadelphia Cricket Club and lost the championship by one shot.

Beat Out Willie Smith.

Fred won his only national championship at the old Myopia Hunt Club, beating out Willie Smith in a thrilling 72-hole struggle. He has been on the threshold of half a dozen other Open titles, but each time the master of the trap shot faltered at some crucial moment.

He has been professional at Columbia for 22 years, and is a fixture there. McLeod is one of the most popular pros in the game, even though he is no nearly as active as he was 10 years ago. He might Kozak and Mehlhorn Get 68s at Augusta.

By the United Press.

Augusta, Ga., March 31.—Walter Kozak and Wild Bill Mehlhorn today carded 68s over the Augusta National golf course and set the pace for an army of links notables tuning up for the annual masters' tournament starting Thursday.

Bobby Jones, designer of the course and host in the annual-tournament of tournaments, carded a sparkling 70, which was matched by Leo Diegel.

Stone Is Picked For 4th Spot In Line-Up

By Shirley L. Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., March 31.—The first problem which Manager Bucky Harris faced on his succession to the management of the Nats was the selection of a clean-up hitter to replace Joe Cronin in the batting order—appears to have been solved beyond the proverbial shadow of a doubt.

Johnny Stone, the streamlined center fielder, who has been producing streamlined base hits in exhibition games all over the South, is justifying with great emphasis the faith in which Harris nominated him for the most important position in the club's batting lineup.

From the outset of his new affiliation with the Nats, Harris had but one choice for the clean-up hitting role pointing out that Stone was the ideal man for the job, although he had never occupied the fourth spot during his six years in the big leagues.

Only Hitting Regular.

The wisdom of Harris' choice has been apparent since the opening exhibition game of the Nats. The Washington club's batting attack has been, in fact, only the lengthened shadow of Stone's war club. The right fielder is the only member of the Nats' regular line-up whose hitting has been satisfactory.

In nine games, Stone has figuratively murdered the pitching. He has compiled 17 hits in 35 appearances at bat for the impressive average of .486 and contained in his blows are the only two home runs made thus far by the Nats, in addition to 3 doubles. With Cronin departed, Stone hits the longest ball on the Washington Club. Heinie Manush, despite his imposing averages, is not a long-distance hitter. Handicapped by abnormally short arms, he is too smart a hitter to overswing. But Stone has all the natural leverage to drive the ball to the fences.

No "Murder" Hitters.

Despite Stone's long-distance hitting proclivities, the Nats do not have a single hitter of the murderous type who can break up ball games with such prodigious wallops as those which thunder from the bat of such as Lou Gehrig, Jimmie Foxx, Hank Greenberg, Hal Trosky and Tony Lazzeri.

Two other potential long-distance

Silas and Furr Fight Tonight In Feature

Show Is Without 'Names;' Ahearn Seeking New Gate Attractions.

FROM the mad 32-round scramble of fighters which will be tossed at the public at the Auditorium tonight may come some outstanding local gate attractions, in the opinion of Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn.

"We must have a show such as this every once in a while," Goldie believes. "A show without names, but packed with potential dynamite and fighters who are on the verge of reaching the point where we will have to bring in outstanding talent to give them a bout. Perhaps our patronage won't be as heavy for this card as for some featuring a big name, but I know the action will be just as swift—if not swifter."

Ahearn's contention that good local drawing cards may be developed on the card seems logical enough, in the opinion of many close observers of affairs fistic.

Silas Fights Furr.

Sid Silas, a willing welterweight who has been turning in pleasing performance after pleasing performance recently, may possibly upset Fitful Phil Furr, District welterweight champion, in the 10-round main event, and if he does, Sid will be in line for some shots at out-of-town talent. A victory for Furr would serve to bolster his already high stock considerably, so, what can Goldie lose, no matter what happens?

Roddy Davis, the local welterweight who has been burning up Washington rings of late, will seek to remove the blot on his record placed there when he was stopped in two rounds by Stumpy Jacobs, in an eight-round semifinal. Should Roddy trounce Jacobs, he will be ready to continue his interrupted trip toward the top. Should Jacobs again apply the snore to Roddy, he will immediately become established as a great local favorite.

Lowry Returns to Action.

Bob Lowry, another local welterweight, will return to the wars after a long rest to tangle with Red Journee, of Norfolk, in another eight-rounder. Lowry was decisioned by Journee in Norfolk last summer, but turned the tables in a return bout here. Both bouts were hard-fought and interesting, and the rubber match, if it proves as full of action as its predecessor, will form

Atcheson is the heavy favorite to win again. With play starting at 1 p. m., the Memphis star does not swing into action until 8 p. m., when he faces Bob Kendler, of the Indianapolis Athletic Club.

Other Stars to Vie.

Among the stars competing against Atcheson are George Nelson, of Baltimore, a former National Y. M. C. Leo Manka and Henry Hertz, of Brooklyn, are the defending doubles champions. Their outstanding opponents are Joe Gudreau and John Endzvick, runners-up in the recent Memphis Y. M. C. A. championship.

Tank Aces Eye New Records This Week

By the United Press.

NEW YORK, March 31.—Crack swimmers of the Nation may leave a flock of new world records bobbing in their wake this week when they plough through the New York Athletic Club pool in the national amateur swimming championships.

More than 100 of the country's mightiest mermen are entered in the three-day meet, including most of the collegiate water-cleavers who made merry wtih universal marks at Cambridge, Mass., over the week-end. Champions in every one of the ten events will be back defending their titles Thursday, Friday and Saturday against the unusual array of new talent.

This A. A. U. competition is additionally important because the performances will determine largely the make-up of the 14-man American team which wil invade Japan and Hawaiian Islands this summer.

Medical to Defend.

Jack Medical, wonder swimmer from the University of Washington who cracked two world records during the National Collegiate Athletic Association meet at Cambridge, will defend his national title in the 500-yard free style. Medica also will try to wrest the 220-yard free style crown from Walter Spence, of the New York A. C.

Spence will defend his 100-yard sprint title against Charley Flachmann from the University of Illinois, who copped the 50-yard and 100-yard sprints at Cambridge.

Helen Jacobs Net Victor.

Alexandria, March 31 (AP).—Helen Jacobs, United States title-holder, today won the Egyptian tennis singles championship, defeating Miss E. M. Dearman, of England, 6—2, 6—0, in the final.

All of the Yanks' runs were scored off Benton in five innings.

The Braves collected all their runs off Russ Van Atta in the third when they put together three singles with a walk. Babe Ruth made two trips to the plate against his old team without getting a hit.

Golden Miller Is Due to Get New Trainer

By the Associated Press.

LONDON (Monday), April 1.—A break between Dorothy Paget, owner of Golden Miller, beaten favorite in the Grand National, and her trainer, Basil Briscoe, was announced in press reports today.

Published reports agreed that Golden Miller and other jumpers owned by Miss Paget will leave Brsicoe's stables at Newmarket to be trained elsewhere. They pointed out, however, that this does not necessarily mean that one of the British turf's most successful owner-trainer partnerships will be dissolved.

It was understood that Briscoe is willing to continue to train Miss Paget's flat-race entries but not the jumpers.

Miss Paget, the Herald says, told Briscoe she was "unsatisfied" with the way Golden Miller was prepared for the Grand National.

Briscoe, the paper says, immediately asked to be relieved of his duties toward Miss Paget's jumpers.

The Mail says Briscoe declined to comment on these reports and quoted Miss Paget as saying:

By Paul Gallico

A Special Correspondent.

EN ROUTE to Augusta, Ga., March 31.—It's beginning again. Life on a rattler. Into New York from Chicago in the morning, off for Augusta in the early afternoon. Just a traveling salesman. But this time it's love. The Master's Tourney over Bob Jones' course in Augusta is the pet of every sports writer because it is the one tournament of the year where the golfing stars let their hair down and play a tournament as if it were fun. It is the unofficial big-shot tournament of America because it is the only one where you will find the name of Robert Tyre Jones, jr., up on the scoreboard. And when you talk about golf you also talk about little Mr. Jones, the golf player.

For two years, except for the Master's Tourney, Jones has been out of competition. The boys ought to be able to spot him three strokes a nine as far as competitive edge is concerned, but he'll still be the hot news over the hill, all around the layout. "What is Jones doing?"

Last year Jones took a licking from the professionals who had been in ambush for a year waiting for a chance at him. They played him on his own course and he finished down in eighth or ninth place. There were two main contributing causes to this. Jones' putter wasn't working and gave him the jitters something terrible and, also, Bob was playing host for the first time to amateur and professional visitors to the golf course which he helped design and build, and when a Southerner plays host he isn't fooling.

No, he doesn't trifle. With a half dozen servitors in the room, it will still be Bob who shakes up the cocktails, Bob who hands a tray of them around, Bob who sees that the nice old lady in the corner has a sandwich, Bob who is the welcoming committee, and Bob who will answer toast for toast, lest some one think him impolite in refusing to drink.

Now, you can not do that and play championship golf, because there is nothing quite so tiring as entertaining. It is all right to come in after a round of meadow marbles, tired and a little low in spirit, and freshen up your soul and body in the locker room with a little sympathy and corn likker.

That just about brings a man back to the place where he can face life for another 24 hours. But the steady grind of parties, and smoke, and standing on one's feet and being pleasant, even to one's most intimate friends, is a drain on the muscles and nerves, and the next day the putts don't drop, and when they don't it's good-by game and championship. All these fellows can get home in two smacks,

He confesses he is happy to be back with Washington, even though he returns as something of a prodigal. It is not difficult to discern that his relations with Owner Griffith now are slightly more deferential than in those intimate days of 1924 and 1925, when Bucky's word was law following his successes—when Griffith jumped to fulfill his every command.

THE gray-haired owner of the Nats has retained his profound respect for Harris' managerial ability. He often states that Harris can get more out of a ball team once the game starts than any other manager he has known in 48 years of baseball. As a strategist, he lavishes praises upon the original boy manager of the Nats. But there is something of a reserve in Griffith's attitude toward his former favorite.

Harris realizes that he is back with the Washington club strictly on trial, that by virtue of Joe Cronin's marriage into Griffith's family and the maturity of Calvin Griffith, the club owner's adopted son, there can be no place for him in the executive offices of the club. His lot now must be strictly that of a manager, standing or falling by the success of his efforts. And he is willing, nay, eager.

Success failed to come his way at Detroit and later at Boston. Six years later, when he was recalled by Griffith to the scene of his former triumphs to succeed Joe Cronin, he came back with alacrity. He wanted another fling and he made no bones about the fact that he was glad to get it. He mentioned, too, that he was out of a job, and that the overhead expenses of his household must be met.

THE $13,000 contract under which he now operates as manager of the Nats is $20,000 below his salary during the three years from 1925 to 1927. About that, he is not concerned, he says. It's the chance that he wants—the fighter's chance—and with the Nats this season he has no more than that.

The ball club that he inherited from Cronin was a seventh-place team, unanimously designated as a second-division club, but Harris is not thinking in terms of the second division. In a fiery address to his ball players before breaking camp at Biloxi, he declared he would be satisfied with nothing less than the pennant.

And then, disillusionment. A city's fandom whom he had inured to victories, resented the loss of pennants in 1926-27-28. His own play at second base was beginning to feel the strain of his player-management and there were errors. Marriage and a fling at high society served to inspire stories that he was a socia butterfly. There was talk that he traded Buddy Myer to Boston because of personal differences.

PEOPLE thought Harris had gone high-hat. The booing that had been desultory at the start of the 1928 season, later could be heard in loud crescendos. No city's fandom ever did such an about face on a popular hero. By the end of the season, Harris had retired as a ball player, but his appearance, even on the coaching lines, called only for hoots.

In issuing a statement at the close of the season after he had signed to manage the Detroit Tigers, Harris said he was sorry to leave Washington. But he was not—totally. Like the fans, he, too, was fed up, he, too, welcomed a change.

Duke Nine Will Oppose Clemson Tigers Today

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Durham, N. C., March 31.—A baseball game of midseason class is expected at Duke University tomorrow afternoon when Coach Jack Coombs' Blue Devils make their debut against the Clemson Tigers at 4 o'clock.

Ken Weafer, husky right-hander who went through the 1934 campaign without a defeat, is slated to pitch for Duke. Weafer appears to be in the best of form and should offer a good exhibition for the major league scouts who are following him.

Walter Johnson Pitched Only No-Hit Game Against Red Sox July 1, 1920, With Sore Arm

By Alan Gould.

Associated Press Sports Editor.

ATLANTA, March 31.—The big league pitcher who frets over some trivial ache or doesn't even want to warm up because of a minor twinge of pain can't expect any sympathy from Walter Perry Johnson, the present manager of Cleveland's Indians, and for nearly a score of years the "fire ball king" of the American League.

Johnson pitched the only no-hit game of his career with an arm that was so sore when he took the box that he didn't feel he would last more than two or three innings. It was against the Boston Red Sox, on July 1, 1920. "The Big Train" had so seldom experienced the slightest difficulty keeping his pitching arm in shape that he refused to yield to the effects of a cold that apparently had settled in his shoulder.

"Clark Griffith asked me if I felt able to work and I said I'd go as far as I could or until they knocked me loose," Johnson recalls. "After the first inning I came back to the bench and told Griff I doubted if my arm would last more than another inning or two. I mean it was really stiff and sort. But I kept pitching and we kept getting the Red Sox out. By the end of the game I was going pretty good, but we had a tough time winning by 1 to 0."

Johnson, in his own words, was "just a big raw-boned country kid with a fast ball" when he came up to the big leagues in 1906 and began a pitching career that lasted 21 years with one club, Washington. Johnson was born in Kansas, moved to California as a youth and first attracted the attention of baseball scouts by his performances with an Idaho club.

"We didn't have as many pictures on our ball clubs back in those days as they do now, either in the minor leagues or the majors. We were always not only ready but eager to work. The idea of having three or four days of rest between assignments never occurred to us. I never felt I was being overworked if I pitched one day, did a relief job the next and then started a game the following day. I guess most everybody remembers the time I started three games in four days against the old New York Highlanders—and won them all. Other pitchers were just as willing to work steadily. Fellows like Chesbro and Walsh were in more than 60 games a season."

Hockey Cup Series To Open Thursday

Toronto Is Seen Favorite to Defeat Montreal.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31.—For the first time since 1928, two Canadian teams will fight it out for the Stanley Cup, emblematic of the world's professional hockey championship.

Survivors of the National Hockey League's preliminary playoffs, the Toronto Maple Leafs and Montreal Maroons will open a best three-out-of-five series for the cup at Toronto Thursday. The second game will be played there Saturday and third and fourth contests at Montreal next week. The fifth game, if necessary, will be played at Toronto.

The Leafs, who made a runaway of the race for first place in the league's Canadian division during the regular season, already have captured the league championship by defeating the Boston Bruins, three games to one, in the first-place playoffs. They undoubtedly will start the final series as favorites.

Gov. Nice Due to Sign "Tax Relief" for Maryland Tracks Today

Bowie Opens Turf Season Tomorrow

Inaugural Handicap Is Feature; Track Ready for Daily Double.

By Walter Haight.

ALTHOUGH the Maryland Agricultural Association, which operates the nearby Bowie track, has been assured that it will participate in the benefits of the "tax relief" bill which has passed both branches of the Maryland Legislature, it is expected that Gov. Harry W. Nice will sign the measure today in time for the opening of the Prince Georges County track tomorrow. When Gov. Nice lifts his pen off the paper, one of the keenest political battles involving the Maryland turf will have ended.

The measure reduces the daily license fee of the four major tracks from $6,000 daily to $1,000, increases the betting tax, or State "take," from the mutuel play from 1 per cent to 2½ per cent and raises the tax on net receipts from 15 to 25 per cent. Although it is claimed that the bill will take $100,000 from the State in daily taxes, proponents of the measure assert that the increase in "take" and receipts tax will balance the racing budget.

Would Boost Purses.

The tracks have promised to increase their purses if the measure was made a law, and this fact would serve to lure a better brand of horses to the State. Bowie has already announced a minimum of $800 purses and may make $1,000 the bottom figure, it has been learned.

The increase of turf opposition in the country, particularly from New England, aided passage of the bill. Track officials contended that, burdened by taxes, they were unable to match the purses offered elsewhere and that Maryland racing was suffering as a result.

The tracks threatened not to operate this year unless given relief, but finally applied for spring dates.

Led by Cummings.

One of the foremost proponents of the bill was Andrew (Cy) Cummings, president of the Laurel track. Cummings, despite ill health, made the trip to Annapolis regularly and led the battle which he says is "for the benefit of the Maryland people."

Interest in racing hereabouts was exemplified when more than 100 persons visited the Bowie track to see workouts despite the rainy weather. The previous Sunday the largest crowd to visit the course on a nonracing day was present.

The influx of horses reached its peak yesterday with the arrival of some 12 carloads from Florida tracks. There are a few vacant stalls, but these have been assigned. Horses are also quartered at Marlboro, Timonium, Laurel and Pimlico and will be vanned to the course for their engagements.

First Daily Double.

Joseph Boyle and Thomas Lynch, the men behind the Bowie guns, have everything in readiness. They have the stacks of "daily double" tickets, the first to be sold in Maryland, prepared for ticket sellers.

Track Superintendent Dick Pendling was disappointed when yesterday's rain made the track soggy, but his force is ready to work if the weather clears.

The Inaugural Handicap, a dash of 5½ furlongs for 3-year-olds and upward, features the opening day's program. It will be supported by the East Port, a test for 4-year-olds and upward over the mile and 70 yards course.

Post time, as previously announced, is 2:30 p. m.

Sid Silas to Fight Phil Furr Tonight

Joe Spangler, a newcomer from Richmond, will tackle Pete Bevans, of Washington, in a six-round welterweight curtain-raiser. Bevens always is willing and able to provide action, and should Spangler show sensationally, he might prove the drawing card to be developed.

POST PREDICTIONS.

MAIN EVENT—Phil Furr, Washington, vs. Sid Silas, New York, welterweights; 10 rounds. Rated C plus. Silas may give Furr trouble for a few rounds, but when Sid's legs start going back on him, Phillie should win without undue difficulty.

SEMIFINAL—Roddy Davis, Washington, vs. Stumpy Jacobs, Norfolk, welterweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. Davis should win handily. If he doesn't run into another swing on the chin whiskers such as laid him low the last time. Jacobs never hit quite hard enough to be dangerous in Virginia, and we don't think he will be able to park his spindly punch on a vital spot.

PRELIMINARIES—Jose Lowry, Washington, vs. Red Journee, Norfolk, welterweights; 6 rounds. Rated D. Lowry has had a long rest and should be bigger, stronger and more willing than ever. He should take Journee without much trouble.

Joe Spangler, Richmond, vs. Pete Bevans, Washington, welterweights; 6 rounds. Rated D. Bevans.

Jones' Tourney Never Wears High Hat

They tell me that this year Jones is welcoming the visiting firemen only in the day time, with a smile on his face, but with four mean rounds of golf in his heart.

Herb Graffis, who publishes a golf magazine, told me he had found out from a greenkeeper that last year Jones had been putting brilliantly up to the time of the tournament. Then they clipped the greens and he couldn't hold the ball down. Eventually this failure to control the ball worked on his nerves to the point where he couldn't even get it "near" the hole.

But regardless of the golf, the tournament ought to be productive of plenty of lies, stories and tears. The show doesn't wear a high hat; there are no snooty officials thumbing the press out of the locker rooms or off the golf course. On the contrary, the golfers welcome us as willing ears for woeful tales and patient shoulders for a good cry. When a professional comes back to the clubhouse with a 76 that should have been a 71, he wants to talk about it and tell people how it happened.

Other professionals will listen, but each with the preoccupied and vacuous expression of a man who is rehearsing the story he is going to tell as soon as the speaker yields the floor. We of the press, on the other hand, have cultivated a sincerely sorrowful expression accompanied by little clucking noises and shakes of the head from side to side, and plenty of "What a break. Well you've had your share of bad luck. Isn't that always the way?

Along with these recitals of disaster and desperation come the good golf and human interest stories. The cut glass decanters of corn likker on the locker-room table are never empty. Two applications of this stuff and the outer layers of the big shots come off as though wiped with varnish remover and the human beings underneath speak freely and entertainingly.

Brooklyn opened with a run on Buzz Boyle's triple and Linus Frey's single, but the Phils came back with four hits, including a triple by Blondy Ryan, and combined them with a wild pitch, a walk and an error by Frey for their big rally. At the Post . . .

with Bill Bennings.

Dear Al, Tropical Park, March 31.

Bill left here last night and he told me to take charge of things for tomorrow and so let's hope I pick horses a whole lot better than I write. But Bill didn't tell not to make no dictionary. He says, "Get the boys and girls some winners, Joe," and if I don't he won't because Don Meade is pullin' me up in the stretch. I would like to say that this ain't the liveliest place in the world tonight. Clocker Mike went to Bowie last week and then Bill ups and goes, too, but I guess I can make out all right if I don't lose all my eatin' money on my selections tomorrow. I'm doin' my pickin' right out of my head, too. Bill took all the speed books away with him, but them things ain't been doing him much good lately so I guess I'm just as well off. I guess you'll be out to Bowie for the big openin' day card. I'm going to get away from here just as soon as I get out of that win line after the eighth race tomorrow. I'm sure expectin' to cash on that horse, Fan.

TRAINER JOE.

First race—Squeeze Out ain't no Man o' War and I ain't no Huey Long, so that makes us start from scratch. I seen old Squeezy the other morning and he looked like he was on his oats. Carl Hanford will have the leg up and he's better than a green hand. Baby Chard has been chewin' his cud around here and might be on the loose tomorrow. Knight's Hope will be third, I hope.

Second race—Looks like that Alger guy has a pair of tutti-frutties in his entry of Nedvie and Ned's Affinity. They come from a family of hot-footin' horses and they can turn on the oil. Glory Greenock and Willow Wood will not be snoring when the getaway bell rings.

Third race—Chief A. picks up oats at a shorter route as a rule, but he meets a lot of bums here that don't know their way around a race track. Standout has four legs and if he feels like layin' 'em down and pickin' 'em up he shouldn't be no worse than second. Momo is a tough bozo to guess.

Fourth race—Dark Vive, breakin' from the far end, will be tossin' wads of dust at this field. Wright, the kick and hustle kid, will be in the saddle doin' his stuff. Nuff said. Pass Up is better than a plow horse and might make the mutuel men wear out a couple of pencils. Sun Reverie to get in the show hole.

Fifth race—Wild Pigeon will have a price tagged on him. He ain't got no wings but he certainly can fly. Jockey Maschek ain't no aviator, either, but I forecast he'll land this one in some of them favorite players' lapels. Frederick and Hank McTavish are a pair of slick hides now and they're going to get part of that dough.

Sixth race—St. Morits, that thing of Whitey Abel's, was trying to pull the wool over our eyes the other day. That was a warm-up for his heavy sugar battle. Watch him tie Mantagna and Bloodroot to the eighth pole tomorrow.

Seventh race—Darkling has been hidin' in a cellar and they're goin' to dust him off tomorrow for some stuff strutting out in the open. I ain't sayin' he'll win and I ain't sayin' he won't win but he's not goin' to do any walkin'. Bill borrowed Peedeeque from the Injuns and he didn't return him. So I'm going to try to make him second. He sure was pickin' ears when he scored yesterday. Idle Along is th CCC special.

Eighth race—Fan should win this heat as far as you can throw a rock. Short on name but long on the stuff it takes. Just put your dough down and go to sleep. Broken Up and Piping Hot should battle for the other kale after Fan is being c

Sholl's and Twin Oaks to Meet Baltimore A. A. U. Champions

South Atlantic Title to Be At Stake

Stonewall and Ramblers Meet Local Fives; All-Stars Picked.

A TWO-OUT-OF-THREE game series for the unlimited and 145-pound South Atlantic A. A. U. basketball championship will be played between District and Baltimore teams, Winfree Johnson, local A. A. U. chairman, announced last night.

Johnson expects to complete arrangements today for the series, with indications he said, that the first game will take place in Baltimore Wednesday night and the second in Washington either Friday or Saturday night.

Sholl's, which conquered Bureau of Investigation in a hotly-contested battle, 34-26, for the District title, will attempt to add to its laurels in the unlimited division at the expense of the Stonewall Democratic Club, while Twin Oaks Black Hawks, which scored a surprising 48-40 victory over the favored Heurich Flashes, will represent the District in the 145-pound class against the Baltimore Ramblers.

Girls to Play Wednesday.

In the meantime, Sherwood, which ended the three-year reign of A. C. Saturday night, stands ready to clash with Leland A. C. for the girls' District championship. The game has been tentatively set for Wednesday at Tech High, but in the event the Baltimore-Washington series games are played on that night here it may be shifted to Saturday.

George Washington University freshmen and Heurich Flashes won the games against Baltimore teams last season.

Bureau of Investigation is still wondering what happened to its vaunted hurricane attack that functioned so smoothly in the first half against Sholl's only to die down like a gentle zephyr in the closing session. Basket ball observers, who were praising the Sleuths for their feat in holding Sholl's to two measly field goals in the first half, concluded that it was too much George Beach and Ollie Tipton that caused the Investigation downfall.

All-Star Teams Picked.

Basket ball referees and tournament officials last night did honor to five unlimited and five 145-pound players by selecting all-star teams for the first time in the history of the event.

Two Sholl's stars, Tipton and Sammy Hook, were awarded the guard posts, while Jim Thompson, the tall, handsome former Duke University star was placed at center as Investigation's contribution, and Bob McVean, of Steward's Pharmacy, former Catholic University captain, and Dave Dantzic, captain of Olmsted Grill, were named as forwards.

Twin Oaks and Heurich Flashes dominated the 145-pound all-star team. Tom Folliard, of Heurich, and "Pop" Hunter, of Twin Oaks, were named as forwards; Walter Olverson, Twin Oaks, center, and Harry Cole, Twin Oaks, and Huck Cavanaugh, Heurich, guards.

There was copious material in the unlimited, and the battle for places was keen. So much so that Dantzic, high-scoring Grill center, was shifted to forward, officials believing he could team well with McVean, another scoring sparkplug.

still be carrying mail over in Scotland today were it not for the fact that someone told him he was a better golfer. Fred was a brilliant player in his native heath, and, not being a man of inaction, he struck out for America in quest of gold and glory. He's had his glory and he's had his fill of gold from golf victories, but the pots in those days weren't anything compared to what they are today.

At Augusta Fred will stroke along with such veterans as George Sargeant, Tom McNamara, Mike Brady, Gil Nichols, MacDonald Smith, Walter Hagen, Jerry Travers, Chick Evans, Francis Ouimet, Jock Hutchinson, just to mention a few. It's strictly a master's tournament. And Bob Jones, the host, considers Fred one of the masters.

Olsen Is Named As Kenwood Golf Head

Successor to Tom Moody; Golfwomen to Vie at Columbia Today.

ED OLSEN, well-known District contractor, yesterday was appointed golf chairman of Kenwood Golf and Country Club by W. D. Ellett, head of the advisory board.

Olsen, considered one of the top-notch players at Kenwood, succeeds Tom Moody. Announcement of members of his committee will be made this week, Olsen said immediately upon taking over his new duties.

One of the new chairman's first concerns will be the drafting of a schedule. Tentative dates for the National Capital Open championship will be made.

Eight clubs will inaugurate activities in the second team competition of the District Women's Golf Association at Columbia this morning. Columbia meets Indian Spring at 9 o'clock; Beaver Dam faces Woodmont at 9:20; Manor opposes Kenwood at 9:40 and Army and Navy takes on Chevy Chase at 10 o'clock. Caddies will be provided by the club. Tomorrow the first teams will meet at Indian Spring.

Weather permitting, George Diffenbaugh, Indian Spring pro, will play host to the District professionals in an informal sweepstakes today, starting at 1 p. m.

Dr. S. B. Muncaster, one of the senior players at Kenwood, found out Saturday that by relaxing after a faulty start he could really shoot some golf. The result was that Dr. Muncaster parred the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth holes.

A new professional has been appointed at the Gibson Island Club. He is Hugh McClelland. He was obtained upon the recommendation of Andy Gibson, Bonnie View pro, who comes from McClelland's native Scotland.

Allegany's Boxers Trim New Yorkers

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., March 31.—Flashing their best form in years, Allegany County's leading amateur boxers pleased the largest crowd to witness a Casey A. A. show this season by winning four out of five matches from Coach Willie Murphy's Staten Island, New York, warriors at SS. Peter and Paul Arena.

It marked the sixth time in two years that the local leather pushers had turned back an out-of-town fistic aggregation in a total of eight intercity matches. One match resulted in an even break, while the lone setback was at the hands of the Pittsburgh Boys Club.

The results:

George Holtz, 127, Mount Savage, decision over Tommy Fazenbaker, 129; Luke; match between Gene Rowan, 131, Cumberland, and Taney Young, 129, Cumberland, declared "no contest" by Referee Conway in third round; Ted Rorick, 140, Cumberland, decision over Herman Vincent, 140, Frostburg; Ferdinand Franchi, 115, Cumberland, decision over Anthony D'Elia, 113, of Staten Island, N. Jones to Return to Golf Wars, Chisox, Cards Sold—It's Ever All Fools Day to Poor Scribes

By Paul Mickelson.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

CHICAGO, March 31.—Extra, Extra, Extra!

The Chicago White Sox will be moved to Milwaukee.

So will the St. Louis Browns.

The St. Louis Cardinals will be moved to Detroit.

The St. Louis Cardinals have been sold.

Jack Dempsey has been injured in an automobile accident.

Shed a tear for the worn out, weary sports writer. You suffer the pranks of April foolers once a year, but the sports scribes have April fool every day as the foregoing rumors barge in to disturb their sweet dreams of another Dempsey-Tunney fight, another grand slam in golf by Bobby Jones, another Man O'War and some more Tildens, Ruths and Harry Grebs.

Always the Same Reply.

Always on the lookout for a smash story, the sports writers rush to the telephone, check up the rumors in question, and always, always come up with the same reply:

"Bobby Jones today denied, etc."

"The White Sox are not for sale."

"Jack Dempsey was eating a big steak today when informed he had been seriously injured, etc."

And so it goes—on and on.

The latest rumor to make its annual visit is the one that the St. Louis Cardinals will be moved to Detroit. President Will Harridge of the American League is called.

"Looks like the real thing this time, Mr. Harridge," the sports writer tells him.

"Well, well," replies Mr. Harridge, "now let me ask you a question. If you owned a big department store that was making money, would you let a rival store set up a notion counter in your establishment? You wouldn't? Well, I guess Mr. Frank Navin, of Detroit, wouldn't either. Has Judge Landis quit yet?"

A Roar From the Judge.

The judge, who can bang a telephone receiver faster than any man west of Broadway, is called.

"Quit?" he roars. "How's your golf game? We'll go out some of these days and make that pill look foolish. Good day."

Bang goes the receiver. The judge hasn't quit.

A message steams over the wire from Richland Center. A report is out, running like wildfire, that Bobby Jones has closed his law books and will return to competition. Atlanta is queried. The reply comes:

Dempsey "Hurt" Again.

"Sure," replies Owner Lou Comiskey, "we'd like to get rid of Al. We've got too many good players around now. Say, what kind of stuff are you drinking these days?"

Dempsey is "seriously injured" four or five times a year. So is Babe Ruth, Rogers Hornsby and Paul Waner, if it's any news to them. Dempsey also buys the Chicago Stadium once a year. Any sports editor can fill out 15 or 20 more rumors that always make April Fool's Day come 365 days a year—to them.

Maybe there's always fire where there's smoke, but if any of these rumors do come true a certain number of sports writers, who have been checking and rechecking them all these years, will get a shock when they learn the final truth. It'll be too much for them.

Judges Selected For Horse Show

Annual Hampton Event Is Set for May 17-18.

By the Associated Press.

Hampton, Va., March 31.—Two outstanding show judges of the East, Harry B. Thornton, of Bradfordsville, Ky., and Courtland H. Smith, of The Plains, Va., have accepted invitations to officiate in the annual Hampton horse show here May 17 and 18.

This announcement was made by George B. Colonna, president of the show. The Hampton show will be the third on the Virginia circuit of 18 shows this year.

Thornton will judge the saddle classes, including the spectacular five-gaited class which featured the show last year, and the good-hands class. Smith, a fox hunter himself, will judge in the hunt events which dominate the program.

Admiral Cary Grayson, president of the National Red Cross, has been invited to act as the third judge.

Twins to Open With Central On Friday

Special Dispatch to The Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., March 31.—Alexandria High School's baseball team will open its 17-game schedule Friday afternoon at Baggett's Stadium, opposing Central, the only Washington high school team to take a decision from the Twins last year.

Some of the Alexandria positions are not as yet decided upon, with Burrell and Heflin waging a bitter war for the first base assignment, and the outfield open to a number of candidates. However, a probable starting line-up will include Godfrey as catcher, Burrell or Heflin at first, Lee Fones or Varney at second, McMenamin at short and Frank Brewer at third. Johnny Nugent seems to be the only definite outfield choice, with Fones, Dick Burrell, Paul Shu, Heflin, Worden all ready for action. Lynn Barnett, Jack Armstrong or Heflin probably will start on the mound.

Today's scheduled practice game between the St. Mary's Celtics and the Mount Vernon Independents was called off because of rain. Manager Beach is still trying to arrange a game for next Sunday. The Celts will practice Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday afternoons.

Rain forced postponement of the practice game between the Fort Hunt Rangers and the Ross Jewelers, scheduled for this afternoon on the Herbert Springs diamond.

Virginia Nines In 22 Games This Week

Only Three Contests Have Bearing on State Race; Generals Lead.

By the Associated Press.

RICHMOND, Va., March 31.—College baseball offers 22 games this week in the Old Dominion, but only three of them have anything at all to do with the State championship race in which Washington and Lee's Generals lead after a successful tidewater tour.

The Generals, embarking on a six-day program, were able to carry only three games to a decision, but won two of them after losing their opener to William and Mary. Two games scheduled with the medical college were not played, thanks to the weather's misbehavior, and yesterday's game with the University of Richmond went 13 innings to a 3-to-3 deadlock.

Play Virginia Thursday.

The Generals' leadership in the State will be short-lived unless they can get by Virginia's strong team Thursday at Lexington.

The only other State games on the program will pit V. P. I. against William and Mary at Williamsburg Friday and Saturday.

Most of the time the State nines either will be at home to Northern visitors or down in North Carolina playing Tar Heel foes. Vermont, reputedly stronger than usual, has six games carded for the week, opening with Virginia tomorrow and then touring the State with stops at Washington and Lee Tuesday, V. P. I. Wednesday, V. M. I. Thursday, Roanoke Friday and Hampden-Sydney Saturday.

Others to Invade.

Following close on the heels of the Green Mountain lads will come Delaware and Dartmouth. Delaware will open with Hampden-Sydney Wednesday, play a second game with the Tigers Thursday, move on to meet Randolph-Macon at Ashland Friday and end the week against Randolph-Macon Saturday. Dartmouth has games booked with William and Mary Wednesday; Richmond Thursday; Washington and Lee Friday, and Virginia Saturday.

Randolph-Macon's Yellow Jackets, one of the Old Dominion's finest a season ago but crippled by the graduation of the entire quartet of infielders, will open the season on Carolina soil. The Jackets meet Elon Monday; Guilford Tuesday, and Wake Forrest Wednesday.

Roanoke has a Saturday game with the University of Michigan.

Rockville High Coach Maps Practices

Many Diamond, Track and Court Stars Lost, but Hopes Are Great.

ALTHOUGH Coach Allen Vogt, of Rockville High School, loses several main cogs in both his baseball and track teams, he is looking to the new season with hope and optimism, and has mapped out an extensive pre-season schedule of practices.

With more than 25 spring contests arranged, the Rocks are faced with one of their longest programs in history in baseball, track and tennis.

Lack of experience on the part of the baseball team is causing Vogt many anxious moments. Gene Ochsenreiter, at third, Durbin in center field and Darby at first are the only men sure of their positions.

Transfers, including Aud, formerly of Poolesville, and Barber, husky backstop, formerly of Gaithersburg, may be the starting battery. Bill Cleveland and Ziska will complete the mound staff.

Four new tennis courts in the rear of the school are proving a boon to court interest. Charles and Stewart Nicewarmer, proteges of Barney Welsh, National Public Parks tennis champion, who makes his home in Rockville, will head the team, with Tony Baker and Gene Ochsenreiter completing it. Matches are pending with District prep schools.

Track Stars Lost.

Practically the entire track team that captured second place last year in the county meet is lost via graduation. Coach Vogt is molding a track team mainly out of the physical education classes. His team will compete in the "C" meet, "M" meet, county meet and a triangular meet pending among county schools.

The baseball schedule:

May 3—Gaithersburg, at Rockville; 7, Hyattsville, at Rockville; 10, Damascus, at Damascus; 14, Sherwood, at Sandy Spring; 17, Poolesville, at Rockville; 24, Hyattsville, at Hyattsville; 31, Sherwood, at Rockville.

Practice at Danville.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., March 31.—Thirteen pitchers and four catchers will take the field here tomorrow in the first baseball practice of the local Bi-State League club. By Thursday the rest of the 37 players will be here to start limbering up.

G. W. Nine Faces Dartmouth Today

Cal. Griffith to Hurl First Game of Season.

Weather permitting, the George Washington team will inaugurate the current collegiate baseball season today against Dartmouth, with Cal Griffith doing the pitching for the local nine at the stadium which bears his surname.

Andy (Trader) Horn, who was to have occupied right field for the Colonials, has been withdrawn from the line-up and his place taken by Marshall Melpolder. "Moe" Berg will be on the receiving end of young Griff's hurling.

Dartmouth will move to Georgetown tomorrow for a game with the Hoyas.

10,000 Likely To See Deep Run Chase

By the Associated Press.

CURLES NECK, Va., March 31.—Race officials said tonight they expected the Deep Run Hunt Club's spring steeplechase next Saturday to attract more than 10,000 persons to watch the thoroughbreds over timber and brush and on the flat.

Fifty-five horses already are entered in the race with a swarm of last minute entries expected to dash under the wire before the deadline at midnight tonight. Mrs. Thomas Somerville's Troublemaker was the only horse entered tonight in the featured Deep Run Cup race, but a flock of entries were expected tomorrow to bring the total to nine or ten.

Zurita Beats Escobar.

Mexico, D. F., March 31 (AP).—Sixto Escobar, Puerto Rican whom many boxing experts consider the outstanding bantamweight of the world, was soundly beaten by Juan Zurita, young Mexican featherweight, in a 10-rounder last night.

Loop Franchise Is Granted to Heurich's

Plans All Games on Road; Schedule Meeting Is Set April 10.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

HARRISONBURG, Va., March 31.—The Heurich Brewers of Washington were granted the sixth franchise in the Valley Baseball League at a meeting of directors here. The Washington Club will have no home games, spending its time on the road and receiving 25 per cent of the gate receipts.

The other clubs admitted to complete the six-club circuit were Front Royal and Orange, Culpeper, Charlottesville and Harrisonburg already had retained their franchises.

President J. A. Roney, of the Augusta County League, and representatives from the Staunton and Waynesboro Clubs of that circuit were present, but declined to enter the Valley League because of the travel involved. Original plans were to have Staunton and Waynesboro complete an eight-club circuit.

George Holtzman, president of the Valley League, called another meeting for April 10, at Culpeper, when the schedule draft will be submitted. It was tentatively decided last night for each club to play three games a week. Each club will be limited to a roster of 20 players, with no additions after July 1.

Woodstock, the fourth member of the circuit last season, did not retain its franchise, holding that it could not afford to make the trips across the mountain to Culpeper and Charlottesville, as well as Orange, now.

Portsmouth Club Gets Six Atlantans

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, March 31.—Six players were turned over to "Pip" Koehler, manager of the Portsmouth (Va.) Piedmont League club yesterday by the Atlanta Crackers.

They were W. H. (Hop) Hopkins, first baseman; Wayne Black, second baseman; Millard (Whitey) Hayes and Kirby Higbe, pitchers; Brunner Nix, young catcher, and Francis (Babe) Buscher.

Buscher is a former University of Maryland three-letter athlete and teammate of "Bozie" Berger, now with Cleveland. All of the players were sent on option, except Higbe, who was turned over outright. The Crackers have a working agreement with Portsmouth.

DICK TRACY — Nice People

The Tax Nuisance.

IN Scotland, just the other day, a noble duke moved out of doors, and saw his assets borne away by British tax collecting bores. His castle stood a thousand years, and there his fathers lived and died, but now it's owned by profiteers all riding handsome, high and wide. The noble duke, he looks around, he looks around with sigh and groan, upon the rolling roods of ground he can no longer call his own. His fathers held the storied place through wars and sieges in the past, no foeman had so fierce a face that it would make them stand aghast. They held the place through siege and storm, they held the place a thousand years, the rude invaders in a swarm they met with claymores and with spears. But then they never had to meet the modern tax collecting horde, who chase their victim, and repeat, and rob him of his bed and board. The noble duke could take an ax, and swat an ordinary foe, but he can't fight the deadly tax that overwhelms and lays him low. Death duties drove him from his home, the income tax his roll destroyed, and now, no doubt, he's billed to roam, a unit of the unemployed. It's sad to see a noble duke, a stately prince or belted earl deprived of honors by a fluke, and taxed until his whiskers curl. The stately homes on British moors are being taxed till it's a sin; and noble dukes move out of doors to let the cheap john pikers in.
